CEÁROΔĊΔS δΔΕΙΔĊ IRISH CRAFTSMANSHIP

The examples of metalwork that have survived destruction combine a complete mastery of technique with an extraordinary skill in design. With the introduction of Christianity, the art of the metalworker, like that of the scribe, was almost wholly devoted to the service of the Church, save for ornamental pins and brooches. Of these the best known is the Tara Brooch, a work of the early 9th century, and one of the two finest examples of Irish craftsmanship in metal The other is the Ardagh Chalice, a work which combines classic beauty with examples of almost every variety of Celtic ornamentation. Other outstanding relics of Irish workmanship are the Cumdach or Shrine of St Molaise's Gospels made about A D 1001, the Shrine of St Mogue, considered one of the most remarkable of Irish reliquaries, and the Shrine of St Patrick's Bell, circa A.D. 1091, made to enclose the bell used by the Saint in the 5th century. The Clonmacnoise Crozier is one of three or four complete croziers that have survived. It belongs to the 12th century

The processional cross, the Cross of Cong, was made about A D 1123 to enshrine a fragment of the true cross, by order of King Turlough O'Connor, All these and many other relics of early Irish culture are in the Treasure Room of the National Museum, Dublin

FARMERS !

EFORE you finally decide your Root Crop Acreage for the Coming Season con-sider the following facts

VERY Average Acre of BEET can produce a weekly Sugar Ration for 6 000 persons 10 tons of TOPS and CROWNS equal to 16 tons of Mangels for Cattle Feeding and 171 cwts of DRIED PULP equal to 171 cwts of Oats for Stock Feeding

VERY additional Acre of BEET therefore can more than replace an Acre of Turnips or Mangels

IME is the Enemy this Season but there is still time to sow BEET Comhlucht Swicre Eireann, Teo.
