CEÁROACAS BAELAC IRISH, CRAFTSMANSHIP

The great pictorial art of the early Christian period, the Illuminated Manuscripts, may perhaps have been a reflection of mural paintings now vanished. The portraits of the Evangelists and the scale of the crucifixions of Duvillaum and Iniskez, show that Irish artists were accustomed to life-size compositions drawn on a flat surface The medieval wall paintings at Abbey-Knockmoy, Holy Cross, and Clare Island show that by the 14th century, Irish painting had evolved from stylised book illumination to naturalism. The subsequent years of turmoil and misery effectively prevented further development

Centuries later when Irish artists began to paint again, they looked to Italy, France and chiefly England to learn anew an art that had developed whilst they were occupied with the struggle for existence Towards the end of the 18th century a period of social and economic liberty produced a brief spell of artistic endeavour. At the outset of the 19th century many frish painters were driven abroad to seek reward and reputation. One of the founders of the Royal Academy was George Barrett, R.A. Another member was Nathaniel Home, R.A. James Barry was its first Professor of Painting, and Sir Martin Archer Shee was a President. Mulready, Maclise and others were thus lost to the country Other brilliant Irish painters were O'Connor, the second Nathaniel Hone, Osborne, Lavery, Orpen and O'Brien
