Treasure of the Incas

Legends of strange dead cities, rich in treasure, and buried deep in the great jungles of South America have stirred the imagination of men for centuries. Jesuit Fathers in the seventeenth century wrote of cities walled with silver and of temples made of gold Soldiers of fortune and merchant-adventurers have fought and died in their search for this El Dorado Travellers in Peru have told of fabulous wealth hidden in forgotten lakes or known only to the Indians Indeed the Indians are believed to have concealed great quantities of silver and gold after the fell of the Inca Dynasty If this be so their secrets have been well kept to this day

Jumbio Spic Instead of Troop meeting on Friday night we were busy making cash On that night and on the following that night and on the following night. Saturday night the Jumble Sale was held. After a hard week's work had been done, mostly by the bigger chaps, but with great support from certain small boys, it was good to know that the Jumble Sale was a real success We must thank all those people who were so generous in supporting us and who went out of their way to help us in every way they could On Friday and Saturday nights, as before stated, the Jumble Sale took place and we succeeded in selling everything except the piano (much to Hago s delight) Nagle, as usual was chief auctioneer, and although he had two long nights of hard work he certainly must have enjoyed it certainly must have enjoyed it all, as he himself remarked, "those chips I got were delic-Everything went as we hoped it would, and the Jumble Sale, like every other year was a great success Again we wish to thank all who suported us in any way, either by supplying us with the goods to sell, or by com-ing and buying them Band—The Band seems to be all set for next Sunday's outing

General—When I come to this heading I always find that I need some help, but at any rate, I will plod along as best I can Now what did I notice happening during the past week which usually doesn't happen? I noticed some busy Scouts collecting for the Jumble Sale, I noticed some more going round in silence without a word to anyone, and yet some more brood-ing over a "deck" of cards in the Committee room Those who come under the first heading were, no doubt, helping to make some money for the Troop, but why did Jeff insist that he should be allotted to the northeast portion of Abbeyside in the job of collecting? It may be that there are so few houses in that district or the quietness and loneliness of the place may appeal to him Those who come under the second heading in the above are the scholars who are on retreat at present Even at night-time I notice that there is a quietness about the Den and other places while these boys have been missing Bed at nine and no chips or during retreat is that Mackin? during this
