Even with this the contribution from the rates would be 6/3d in the £ and that would have to be paid for thirty long years.

At a time like this, I think that it is utter madness to even consider such a scheme. The town already owes well over a quarter of a million pounds in loans without having a further ninety thousand slapped on to the debt. The water supply may not be all that could be desired for Dungarvan, but the unfortunate position is that we have reached the stage where we must cut our cloth according to our mea.
