Time by Train

Every night at Euston, for over a hundred years, a Post Office messenger handed a leather lase containing a watch to the guard of the Irish Mail On the arrival of the train at Holyhead the correct time was given to an official on the waiting steamer, the watch being then returned on the up mail train to London to be set again for its next journey The custom dates from the days of the mail coach, when Greenwich time was less generally observed than it is to-day. In spite of the advent

a. It is time you bought a ticket in the of telephone, telegraph and radio time signals the practice of carrying a watch to Holyhead was continued until comparatively recently
