DEAD LEAVES Why do the poets pity us so? Why do they mourn and sigh chant our woes in a dirge-like strain

That would nearly make one If they come out the very next day, The big wind sweeps oer the hill, They'll see how merry dead leaves can be, A flying at their own sweet With many a spring through the Queen's highway. O'er moorland and dark vale

As though by the elves are we borne along Wherever we wish to go weren tour poor forms cramped and stiff Stuck fast to those stupid trees Dancing for aye to the dressing tune Of his excellency the breeze

Twas all very well when the Spring Queen came A-visiting Mother Earth When the grass grew green and the brooks ran wild And we laughed in our baby mirth

And eyes grew bright when they saw us smile That were long bedimmed with pain, Oh! the joy of living those glad glad days—

They will never come back again In the summertime twas sweet to stray Where our graceful screens were hung When the merles whistled the live-long day, And the lusmore bells were clear A bevy of ladies gay And the playful breezes would come down at once And join our race through the wood

For not matter how heartless Fate may prove Sure fretting's no earthly good

But we're wasting time a Where unknown
