Poems of "Heather Bell," 33rd in the Series—

A HILLSIDE FAR AWAY I'll sing tonight of a sweet old On a hillside far away,

Where the breezes mourn with sweetest sound Through the pine trees dark all day Whre the bournie mourns to troll a song-On its way to the sapphire sea Alas' for the days that have crept along Since I heard its melody

Where the robins warble a sweet farewell As the evening s shadows fall And the marle at rosey morn replies
To the chanticleer's loud

call. Where the levere's leap in the green wood depths, And the primrose stars the brae When the springtime's dainty footsteps dance On that hillside far away

And Ill sing of a homestead quaint and old With roses and jasmine twined It's hedge rows and meadows green in front And the mountain peak behind Till I dream that I gaze on a flower-like face Blithe as a morn in May As it smiles at the door of that dear old home On that hillside far away

Ah! here tonight as I wander alone Thro hall memory s ghost-like I fancy I hear loved voices

TWO SAVING SUGGESTIONS

Is there a potato in the house? If so, youre never stuck for a meal It was the failure of the potato crop in Black-Fortyseven" that drove the Irish to the emigrant ships Never throw cooked potatoes away Among the dozens of ways for using them up here is one of the nicest and quickest. You could make it while you are boiling the kettle. If you like onion flavour start with a small minced onion which you fry on the pan Lift it out Slice or chop the potatoes and fry to a golden brown Return the onion

Add a few chopped left-overs from the larder Not too much Not at all if you prefer the dish plain Beat an egg or two, add a little milk and pour over the mixture Cook until set

Fried potatoes with beaten egg is a favourite dish in Spain where they call it a Tortilla In rural Germany it is Bauern Fruhstuck or the Farmer's Breakfast It's good everywhere All around the clock, all around the world, the versatile potato never fails the cook
