A native of Cappagh, Ballybally, he emigrated in 1915, and now owns ranch land in America, is visiting the land for the third time. His wife is also a native of Ballybally. He said he planned the trip after his return from last year in 1958, and towns looked cleaner and brighter. He was also interested in the Irish cattle he saw. He thought the quality of the cattle improved as he had one criticism.

"Why," he said "do the people responsible not cut down the hedges and trees along the roadways, and there is no scenery like it anywhere. Tourists come to Ireland to view the scenery and not to look at trees and hedges."
