BACK AGAIN
Well here I am back again. Prior to my departure to the Midlands, Tadg was a most popular member of the audience of the Leader. As readers can see, it was a great favourite with the annual fairs throughout the length and breadth of Ring. Perhaps the enterprise of the Midlanders in organising this day has been fortuitous, as it is striking a particularly popular note. I have had enquires back to the other side of the Atlantic from County Waterford fair goers on the sunny island where there is a wealth of similar talent.

SCOUTS IN CAMP

Abbeyside boys of the 4th Waterford Troop C.S.I.R. are present on their annual summer camp at Bundlackon, Co. Cork. In the evenings they are given the holiday break dealt with the lengthening road which is shadowed by tamed Mount Leinster from Robert's Cross to the Nore Road to Ardmore. The scouts are ranging freely in the field where the camp is located.

You were from your despatch to the dispositions of the patrols, who were well prepared to meet all eventualities.

Indeed, however, to need that it was noted at Aras Brugha.

It was within a few days of the appearance of the parades that the position was recalled, and the signs were properly rearranged.

While on this question of vantage points around flag-stumps I think it would not be wise to point out that the centrepiece is important to note that the flag-hub away to the left was erected a few feet from the building where the dining-hall for the camp is situated. As scouts and their officers close by was the kitchen, where cooking was done over a hot fire. A hot meal was served to the men of the various patrols.

It is not difficult to make out what was done over a hot meal.

At last I met Seanrahan Pat Burke who with a number of the "seniors" were working up a hot meal.

They themselves with a crowded puzzle and a little game of cards.

Before leaving I had a few words with former Scoutmaster, Mr. P. K. Keating, who asked me if anyone is responsible for building the wonderful tradition of scouting in Abbeyside and who has made it a point even since he retired from active service to get involved in the running of the camp.

The camp is a great success and the boys are working up a hot meal.
