In what he described as the strongest statement, he ever

They would have the processional members getting all the senior posts leaving the elected members with only the crumbs Last year when an elected representative was made chanman some of the professional people were mumbling and grumbling and one of them observed we can t allow this to happen agam '

Mr Curran said that the professional members now occupied the chair for the third year in four and it was clear that it was the volley of the majority of them to exclude as far as possible the elected representatives from the senior mosts and grab them for themselves
Mr Currans attack provoked

In a brief reply, Chairman for their kind expression, of its best in the matter and he could see no point in pursuing it Curran was entitled to his point of view he would not agree connivance
