Providing services such as water, sewage and electricity can involve you in substantial capital expense depending on the location of the house and the work involved

In this connection, the fact that there are ESB lines or cables nearby does not always mean that the house can be provided with an electricity supply cheaply and quickly

Consequently, in your own interests before you close the deal for a site, help us to help you by asking us for the facts about what is involved in providing you with an electricity supply there

This is particularly important if the site is in a rural location where the Government's Rural Electrification Scheme is no longer available to subsidise supply costs
