wish many years of wedded bliss in their life together Hurlers Exit — An account of this game can be seen in the GAA columns, so I do not wish to go into details about it, just again seem to have a hoodoo over our team and though only playing with 13 men in the se-cond half the Bridesiders were able to hold out for a two points

As has often been proved in the past a team playing understrength can raise its game as were unable to use the extra players to advantage By now many post-mortems will have been held but on the night too many players failed to play up to standard and scores went abegging which would in the normal course of events have been converted

Now that Ballyduff are out of make progress in this the first year in senior hurling at least in the two games played the margins of defeat were small which clearly points to the fact that Ballyduff belong in senior hurling and with better luck things should be far better next year Nothing can be gained by looking back, at least something might be gained by looking forward
