Fr Butler who was formerly Rector of the Augustinian College as well as Prior in Dungarvan in the 1960s records that between 1750 and 1754 Fr Nicholas Fitzpatrick, Prior "built his own convent a solidly-built stone and mortar two-storey cottage with thatched roof" and later a Mass-house at the Spring about a mile outside the town He then states "It is an historical certainty that the friars did live at the Spring at this time, as, not only the Homes traditional accounts of the people assert so, but documents in the Augustinian Archives in Dublin verify this radition

"Of the location of the house at the Spring we have no doubt whatever It was in the field opposite Moloney's Garage in what were, up to 1972 the Friary playing fields Fr James Williams who came to Dungarvan in 1869 refers in his "Chronicles to a letter he received from an old resident of the district, Miss Susan Kiely in which she describes the Convent of the Friars "The friars and our family met daily as their homes were almost adjoining I do not know when the Fathers left the Spring They lived there when my father was a boy (around) 1800) and I don't know who succeeded them in the field and house which was always known as the "Friary" The little thatched house still standing (1800) is part of the Priory or out-offices I heard my father speak of marble chimney-pieces as having

HOMEWARD ONCE MORE

Bright shone the light from the heavens on high Not a cloud marred the light of the brilliant blue sky.

There stood on the beach on a far distant shore An exile of Erin the land we adore He vacantly gazes far o'er the blue sea And things of the land that he longs to set free And now while he s waiting the time's drawing nigh When the good ship will take him home for to die

Homeward once more homeward once more
The good ship is speeding to Erms green shore
The exile returns no longer to roam To end his career in his own

The country he loved and for Ireland he bled For which he was sentenced to hang until dead That sentence was not carried out if you please out if you please
But instead he was Lamshed for years o er the seas For twenty long years in the prime of his life
He was parted from kindred from home and from wife
And now where he stands alone on the shore Awaiting the steamer bound homeward once more The scene now is changed the ship ploughs the sea The exile on board breathes the air pure and free, As soon as he sights the dear land of his love He murmurs a prayer to his Maker above With happy emotion his heart

wildly thrills
At once more theholding his dear native hills
And as he descends from the ship to the shore.
'Thank God' he exclaimed
I'm in Erin once more
