The facts from the 17th chap, 70 Ed. 7, Sec. 1, he said he believed that the provisions of that Act applied to the cases before them. The Act laid down that where a person was charged before a Court of Summary Jurisdiction with an offence punishabl by such court, and the court thought the charge was proved, but was of the opinion, having regard to the character of the person charged and the trivial nature of the offence, that it was inexpedient to inflict any punishment, the court might without proceeding to conviction make an order dismissing the charge. He was strongly in favour of dealing with those cases in the manner suggested by the Act. The charge was most trivial, and in the interest of the peace of the town and district he believed it would be inexpedient to inflict any punishment. The Act empowered the court to dismiss the cases, and he suggested that they should adopt that course. The Chairman said it was not necessary for him to go into the law points involved in the cases. They were precisely the same as in the cases heard a forthight ago, and be then had occasion
