with the Press, and there is practically nothing going upon which a "fear nuaid heachta" could string a couple of lines not to mention a column or even a half or quarter column. It is one of those periods when one is compelled to draw on the magination and "pad" out contributions in the shape of anonymous letters dealing with such questions as "Sea Serpents" and the like. Take the past week, for nstance. There was not a single meeting or local function of any kind to fill up a stray column or two. In the columns of the Cork Press poor old Eochaill is still coming in for hard knocks. One writer dubbed it "the washed out remnant of a bathing place." Isn't that a pretty expensive phrase, calculated, if not intended, to damn it as far as possible in the eyes of the travelling and holiday-making public? The writer evidently wants all kinds of (what he deems) good things to be supplied for the benefit of people who, perhaps, would condescend to run down of an evening to have a high time of it-a casino, a kursaal, in a word, up-to-date appliances for all kinds. It seems a genuine instance of "the best hurler is the man on the ditch." Viewing the play from a safe vantage point, he can tell quite easily how the game should be fought to be won. Just pull him down off the stile, put a caman into his hand, shove him into the melee, and the time is changed in a twinkling. The recent Press controversy about the backwardness of the Youghal "City Fathers" in coming forward to cater for all and sundry visitors brings to mind the fact that for some 30 years a gentleman holding an important official position in Glasgow came to Youghal regularly to spend his summer vacation. On one occasion he was asked how it was he left all the swell watering places behind him to bury himself in this muchabused seaside resort down at the other end of Ireland-the Free State rather. "Well, you see, it's this way," he said." "Across Channel, the watering places con-I got a bit of nature all around. Otherwise it would he no change and no holiday." Undoubtedly there is a bit of philosophy and onsense in his remarks. They go a long way to explain the continued popularity of this 'washed-out remnant of a bathing place," don't they? Here is one of the latest specimens he anonymous letters about Youghal:-

DEATH.

KENNEDY—On April 12th, at his son's residence, Woodstock, Cappoquin, James C. Kennedy, of Newtown, Kinsalebeg, Youghal; deeply regretted, R.I.P.

Four long years since mother left us,

How we miss her loving face,
But she left us to remember

None on earth can take her place.

A loving mother now has gone,
A mother fond and kind,
Whose memory always fresh will be
With those now left behind.

The blast was fierce, the shock severe,
To part with her we loved so dear;
Our lot is hard, we won't complain,
But hope in Heaven to meet again.
Inserted by her sorrowing husband and dents.
