KILMACTHOMAS NEWS.

THE LATE FR. TIMOTHY

CUSACK, P.P.
A solemn Requiem Mass was celebrated at the Church of St. Aidan, Royton, Lancs., for the repose of the soul of the late Father Cusack (whose demise was reported in our previous number), its Pastor since 1898. The deceased clergyman was a brother of the present Parish Priest of Powerstown, Very Rev. P. Cusack, P.P.

Most Rev. Dr. T. Henshaw, Lord Bishop of Salford, presided at the High Mass. Monsignor Nugent, P.P., V.G., was assistant priest. The assistants at the throne were: Monsignor O'Kelly (late V.G.,) and Canon Burke, James O'Sullivan, C.C., etc., etc.

After the Mass the Bishop addressed

BAD FOR SPECULATORS AND INVESTORS.

A prominent local citizen informs us that a certain number of shares in leading British Industrial Ordinary Shares brought him in 1931 £36 dividends. In 1930 the same shares brought £112 in dividends, and in 1929, £135. The market value of the shares has fallen 80 per cent. since March, 1929. This we take is a typical instance of how local speculators and investors have suffered during the past 3 years.

A DUNHILL DEATH. The death occurred at the Mercy Home, Cork, of Mr. Patrick Cooney. Dunhill, and the interment took place in the cemetery attached to the parish church, Dunhill, on Friday of last week, in the presence of many mourners and friends. Deceased was a wellknown, widely-esteemed farmer. His father was for a considerable number of years associated with the late Captain Palliser, of Annestown, who was a noted Southern Ireland Landlord. On Thursday, 14th inst one of the worst storms experienced for many years raged over this town and district but strange to relate, it caused far less damage than many milder cyclonic visitations in the past. Mrs. Lizzie Brennock, a widow aged

The weather was wet and stormy, and she had a shawl pulled well over Melleray and which was driven by Anthony Grey, Tallow. The unfortunate woman was knocked down, but the driver of the car immediately pulled up and went to her assistance and acted in a most humane and considerate manner under the circumstances.

Sergt. J. Rochford, and other Civic Guards were quickly on the scene and had the woman taken in to a neighbouring house where she was prompt ly attended to by Dr. Wm. White,

She was suffering from a scalp wound, caused by the fall, and it was also believed that one of her ribs was fractured, but after being carefully treated by Dr. White, she was removed to her own home in Mass Lane. If there was an alternative market to England what was preventing Fianna Fail, which was always jibing at them starting a private Company and tak-ing on the business and see if it could be done. It is a bad thing to have only one customer for our goods, and if there was any other market than England, he was sure the Government would long ago have opened it up. What were the alternative markets where Irish produce could be sold? Was it in Holland, Belgium, France, or Germany? Would they go to the Laplanders or the Esquimaux to sell them Irish produce. At the moment done by abolishing the Oath. They ther is no possibility of any other say they will produce a certain cure ther is no possibility of any other market than England. He referred to the negotiations going on at the mothe negotiations going on at the mo-ment between the British representatives and Messrs. Hogan and McGilligan in regard to the sale of more goods by Ireland to England and said that was one of the reasons why the Cosgrave Government should be returned to power with a good majority. This was going to be a bread and butter election. Fine words, jibes and jeers from Fianna Fail were not going to fill hungry stomachs. They wanted to increase the flow of trade between. Ireland and England and bring material advancement to both nations. In | ties. the past they were up against England and vice-versa, yet the time had come when a better understanding should take place between them. They had in the constitution of the Saorstat everything tantamount to a Republic except thelabel. They had their own army and Guards etc., and everything that went to make a nation great. To work out its destinies to success was in their own hands and he hoped they were not going to throw away that golden opportunity of improving their lot. Owing to the financial state of the world no nation today could stand alone and they could not build up indiscriminate tariffs. Greater nations and greater Statesmen had tried to solve that problem and failed. He asked his audience to remember the seriousness of the results that might happen if Cosgrave were not returned to power. He was sure the Cumann Na nGaedheal Party would be returned and that that constituency would sent three men to the | Stock.

CAPT. REDMOND'S ADDRESS.

ANNUITIES QUESTION.
Capt. Redmond, T.D., said they were well on the eve of a General Elec tion to be held under terms of the constitution of 10 years ago. In that Treaty neither side got all they desired or there would be no occasion for a Treaty if that were so. At the same they had secured for the Free State a measure of freedom second to none in the world. It was a measure of in dependence which if offered to the colonists of North America at the time of the American war of Independence would have been accepted by them and to-day there would be no such was held in the Square, Dungarvan, on Sunday after last Mass, at which was like General Hertzog a Dutchman who fought for his country and was prepared to die for it was satisfled to accept the status of South Africa within the British Common-wealth of Nations they should be prepared to accept the status of the Free State within the same Empire.

At the General Election there will be two great parties going forward to seek your votes and who will be prepared to take up the reins of office. One of these parties is prepared to support the constitution and maintain the treaty; the other declares their first act will be to renounce the Treaty and disrupt the Constitution. Which are you going to chose? He was there that day to support the Party who had and were maintaing law and order in the State. The Annuities were not paid by the Irish Government to the English Government: What happened was that the annuities were collected by the Free State and transferred to a special fund known as the Land Purchase fund which happened to be in the Bank of England and with which the British Exchequer had no more to do than the Dungarvan Urban Council. It was suggested that Land Annuities should be abolished altogether. That, to his mind, was a dishonest and an improper doctrine. For some reason or another it was thought that seemed a little too much of the form of common robbery so the next proposal was that the land annuities were not to be abolished, for the farmers of Ballinacourty and district should keep on paying them, but it was to De Valera in place of to the holders of the Land

It is a bad workman who quarrels with his tools. Has not De Valera the finest tools imaginable in the shape of the rights and privileges under but there was no use in talking of that which we live in the Free State whereby he can fashion and mould the future welfare of the country. Cos-grave and his colleagues are satisfied that with the means at their disposal, with your help and assistance they can work the country for the benefit of the citizens as a whole. De Valera, on the contrary, declares that because of the oath and other things he cannot do anything to help the farmers and labourers. In conclusion he appealed for support at the polls for President Cosgrave's Party.

THE FUTILITY OF TARIFFS. Senator Wilson (who is a large and practical farmer in Co. Dublin, and also in Co. Wicklow), said if President Cosgrave thought a tariff wall policy would be a success for the country, he would have adopted it long ago. When you put on tariffs you rise the price of that commodity to the customer. Were their boots cheaper to-day because there was 15 per cent. tariff on them. The main income of the country was produced by the farmer and he must take the prices of his com-modites as calculated in the open market of world competition. Suppose you pay £5 for an armchair calculate what it means in terms of gallons of milk at 6d. per gallon. It means the farmer must give 200 gallons of milk. Furniture has a 33 1-3 per cent. tariff on it. That was a low tariff and if the other side got into power it would be 100 per cent, and how then could you pay for what you would require. Tariffs mean taxes, and farming, which is the principal source of industry has to compete against world competition. He did not know that there was a crop more dangerous for the farmer to grow than wheat. Why should they grow wheat and sell it at 15s, per barrel, when they get a better chance by producing these things that could be exported—cattle, sheep, pigs, eggs and butter. He rediculed the idea of splitting up the country into small farms, of 20, 30, or 40 acres and the proposal that next Dail to assist the Party. If they did not want a repetition of the doings of 1922 and 1923 they had now the chance of giving all the disorderly sections of the community their answer.

If England were to put 15 per cent tariff on Argentine beef see the advantage it would be to this country? Would not it give the farmer a chance of living. In 1924 they had a small butter trade from Cork to America, but when the American farmers saw the Irish butter coming on their market they raised an agitation and at DAIRY SHORTHORN BREEDERS' once 6d. per lb. tariff was put on the imported butter and ended the trading. The same was the experience they had with other countries. The only place to which they could send their produce was to England. Here at home they could produce the best of beef and they would always have people in England with money to buy it: Fianna Fail say they will do away with big salaries, reduce expenditure T. Mr. Jas. Daly, proposed a vote of thanks to Dr. McCarthy, for presiding. as also to the speakers.

Mr. John Kiersey, seconded, and said that as a farmer speaking to farmers he preferred to pay his land annuities rather than have a land tax imposed or him as was threatened on the farmers sometime ago. That was a tax which could be varied from time to time and was one with which they wanted to have nothing to do.

The resolution was passed with acclamation and the meeting ended.

The Preservation of Grass for Winter Fodder.

LECTURE BY DR. KENNEDY SECRETARY J.A.O.S.

DELIVERED AT THE CONGRESS OF COW-TESTING ASSOCIATIONS IN CORK.

Dr. Kennedy said he would address himself at the beginning to a solution of the problem of why winter dairying was a common feature of the agriculture of the Scandinavian and Bal-

the farmer between one country and another. As regards root crops, it might be said that the Danish problem is solved by the growth of enormous quantities of this form of winter fodder, but when we come to the more severe climatic conditions of Finland and the Baltic States we fined that root crops are of even more negligible proportions than they are in this country, so that the fact that we grow comparatively small quantities of root crops does not give us the key to the solution of the problem which is being considered. In Finland, a country about which we should hear considerably more, the cows are on pasture only four months in the year, and in the northern districts only three months in the year. During the remaining eight or nine months they are completely housed. The country is snowbound from about the end of September until the beginning of May and yet their highest period of milk production is during the winter. What, the, is the fundamental difference between our condition and theirs? Dr. Kennedy suggested that the difference consists in the quality of the hay which is produced here as against these countries. In the Saorstat we have a rainfall more or less uniformly distributed over the year and varying in different districts from an average of 40 to 60, or even 70 inches. In the countries with which the comparison is being made, the rainfall varies from 20-26 inches. The trade. We hold an immense stock of summer months are extremely dry open and close fire ranges, self-setting and warm, so that hay-making does open and close fire ranges, self-setting and warm, so that hay-making does ranges, Cooking Stoves, Independent not present the difficulties there that ence of generations that winter pro-Ovens, Heating Stoves, Plain and of hay-making is specially adapted to basis of hay-making is confirmed by cass—the resulting material being basis of hay-making is confirmed by cass—the resulting material being minimise the loss of nutrients in the clover or grass which is mown for hay. In Finland, and to a great extent in Sweden and the Baltic countries, the grass or clover is taken direct from the swath immediately after being cut and strung on wooden frames of various kinds where it is left to dry and it dries in a few days under favourable weather conditions. The hay so produced is of excellent quality, retaining its green colour and sweet aroma and having such a low moisture content that it can be immediately taken to the barns and preserved without any fermentation or heating whatever. The result is a fodder which is capable not only of maintaining the cow's body weight and vital processes, but also of contributing substantially towards the production of milk.

It is not necessary, the lecturer pointed out, to draw attention to the extraordinary difficulties of hay-making in the Saorstat. It is too obvious to anyone travelling through the country in the hay season that appalling losses are apparent. It is not unusual to see hay lying on the swath with the green aftergrass coming through it. and it is not unusual, even if the hay is got into field cocks under comparatively favourable conditions to experience tremendous losses of food migterial in wastage in the tops, butts and sides of the field cocks before they artransferred to the barn.

LOSS OF FEEDING VALUE

These losses and this wastage are obvious to anybody, but it is not so generally realised what the losses in hay-making are even under the most favourable weather conditions. Much work has been done in this subject by German and Swiss agricultural scientists, and it may come as somewhat of ashock to learn that even under dry weather conditions experiments made in Switzerland showed a total loss of 40 to 45 per cent, of the nutrient value of the hay. This loss of food material is due mainly to four constituents in the processes of respiration while the plant still lives. The next is the breaking off and loss of leaves and flowers of the grass during the process of hay-making, these portions of the plant being the most valuable from the point of view of food content. The third loss is the lowering of digestibility of the material. The fourth loss is due to the action of micro-organism when the hay is put into stack. It may be emphasised again that these experiments were made in dry weather conditions Dr. Kennedy said that the experiments to which he referred made in iry weather afford sufficient food for thought. It is a matter for farmers to speculate on what the far greater losses are in the case of our climate with its 40 to 60 inches of rainfall, and in our conditions of hay-making, which necessitate the retention of the cocks in the field for long periods be-fore the hay is transferred to the barn. There is one point which he thought is worthy of special emphasis. German experiments have shown clearly ways happy together until a nice-looking young woman came to live next digestibility of the mineral content of door. She unbalanced all the hust the hay when made under unfavourable to content of advertises its presence in the locality by its smell, which is very objectionable to content of the hay when made under unfavourable to content of the hay when made un able conditions. Can it be done by an extension of cultivated crops, cereals and roots? My personal opinion is that that line of attack leads nowhere. I am speaking merely of the production of winter food for cattle. If we confine our problem to that, what we really want to get at is how to produce the maximum amount of winter food for cattle per acre of land at the lowest cost."

grow grass is the humid climate and the more or less continuous rainfall that the process may be successful. throughout the growing season. Denmark, the Baltic State, Finland and Sweden cannot grow grass as we can, therefore they fined it expedient to prepare their winter food for cattle by cultivated crops, clover cereals, and particularly in the case of Denmark and Southern Sweden, roots. Now, we can grow grass and, in so far as our summer conditions are concerned we have a unique advantage shared probably by no countries in the world except New Zealand and part of Holland. It is a question, then, how to utilise this advantage we have in the cheap production of cattle food in the form of grass so as to make it availmodern scientific thought, so that when anybody draws attention to the differences between our dairy production ,say, and that of Denmark without drawing attention to the climatic difference, they are likely to be very wide of the mark in attempting to arrive at a solution.

How then can an improvement be made in the preservation of summer grass for winter use? One line of attack is the artificial drying of the grass and certain small-scale attempts have been made in many countries to solve this problem in an economical way. While it is dangerous to speculate too far as to the limitations of scientific and engineering possibilities, at present it does not seem likely that the problem will be solved in this direction so as to be applicable for the comparatively small farms which exist in this country. The other line of attack is the preservation of grass in the fresh state. There is nothing whatever new in the storing of grass or other fodder crops in this form as, since the very early ages of man, attempts have been made with more or less success. It is however, only within the last ten or fifteen years that science has succeeded in elucidating the complicatel processes which go on in this method of preservation and has led to processes which can be guaranteed to produce a standardised product.

In 1923, when the German people suffered so severely fro mfood shortage and the economic difficulties in-volved in the import of feeding stuffs for cattle, the German Government provided finance and established an organisation for the study of the scientific, technical and practical problems involved in the storage of grass in silos so as to reduce the waste of food material to a minimum. Experiments were caried on in many centres associated with the University, agricultural an dother institutions, and the final result must be regarded as representing a very substantial advance.

Prior to the work of this German organisation, the usual procedure in the ensiling of protein-rich plants such as young grass or clover, was to allow the temperature of the fermenting material to rise to about 120 degrees F Provided this was done carefully and the temperature carefully controlled, satisfactory results were obtained The preservation was done by a lactic acid fermentation and the material was palatable and free from objectionable odours. The loss of food nutrients, however, was exceedingly high, amounting to 40 per cent., with even heavier losses in the valuable protein. As applied to this country. a further difficulty arises. If the temperature cannot be controlled and, if instead of rising to 120 degrees F., remains for any length of time in the region of about 100 degrees F .- as is likely to happen in moisture-laden material such as is common here—a very objectionable fermentation, the butyric acid fermentation, takes place resulting in a fodder material which most care and with the highest technical skill. The digestibility is measured by a well-known technique by feeding the fodder to sheep. In one such experiment it was clearly shown that when comparison was made between hay made under favourable conditions the air, a different form of lactic acid fermentation took place, and the ten. and hay made under uniavourable conditions the digestible mineral content from the bad hay was only one-fifth of that from that of the good hay.

"I make special emphasis of this point," Dr. Kennedy said, "owing to the importance to either lactating formentation. By this means it was formentation. By this means it was formentation. found that the losses of food material between mowing machine and cow amounted only from 10 to 15 per cent. culture of the Scandinavian and Baltic countries, while it was practically non-existent here. The solution could be got by a comparison of the food supplies available for cattle throughout the winter. Winter food consists of hay, root crops and concentrated mixtures of grain and cake. As far as the latter are concerned it would seem that there is not much difference in cost to the farmer between one country and the farmer between the food the farmer between the farmer between the farmer between the fo

The feeding experiments made of the resulting material have shown that dry matter for dry matter, the outgoing material has the same nutrient value as the grass which is put in. > So much for the results in Germany Recently even more extraordinary re sults have been obtained in Finland A process has been evolved which claims to preserve summer grass for winter use with virtually no loss what ever. 'In 1925 the Director of the Research Laboratory of Valio-the great Finnish co-operative dairy organisa tion-began an investigation of the preservation of grass. In 1928 the results had progressed to such a stage that Valio carried out experiments on feeding the resulting fodder to cows on two farms. The feeding results were so good that i othe next year, 1929 Valio carried out an intensive campaign among its farmer members, I with the result that 3,000 Finnish farnow generally known as the A.I.V. fodder. In the year (1930) 5,000 farmers made the fodder, and the farmers who made it the previous year extended their amount. In last year's estimate Valio, apart from its expenditure on its research laboratory, allocated £2,000 for special propaganda among its farmer members. Valio is sues a fortnightly journal to 50,000 dairy farmers associated with its creameries, and in the 1930 volume practically every issue contained an article encouraging the farmers to adopt this new method of fodder conservation. Valio has patented the process which consists of the addition of certain acids to the material which is be ing stored. There is no necessity to chaff the material, and the process is applicable to such plants as marrow stem kale, and presumably cabbages, without being chaffed.

Quite recently the Royal Swedish Agricultural Society purchased the patent rights of the A.I.V. process for Sweden

Very exhaustive experiments have been made in Finland on the feeding value of A.I.V. fodder. In the publications of Valio issued to their farmers they advise that provided the A.I.V. fodder is made from young grass or clover, no concentrated food whatever should be given to the cows unless they are yielding over four and a half gallons of milk per day. It is not necessary to go into the results of the experiments in any detail, but one example should put clearly before you the extraordinary economic results which have been abtained by this new process. A cow fed the whole year round with about 90 lbs. of A.I.V. fodder, 5 lbs. of hay, 3 months pasture, and no concentrated food whatever. yielded in the lactation period 900 gailons. It should not be necessary for me to point the moral of this extraordinary development in Finland. In grass preserved by the A.I.V process the vitamins are preserved so also is the carotene, which, incidentally, is associated with one of the vitamins. The carotene is responsible for the primrose colour of butter-and it has been definitely established that butter made from A.I.V. fodder has the same characteristics of texture and colour as summer grass butter.

IMPORTANCE OF NEW DIS-COVERY.

There are, Dr. Kennedy stated, in every country epoch-making discoveries from time to time in agriculture Of the most profound significance to the farmers of this country was the introduction of the application or a chemical mixture in the spraying of potatoes to prevent potato blight, whereby the growing of the potato crop was, for all practical purposes put beyond the region of doubt. The potato area in this country is about 350,000 acres. The area of our mendow land is 2½ million acres. If the produce of that can be doubled as regards its yield of digestible nutrients suitable not merely for the maintenance of the cow, but for production and, in the case of store stock, increase in weight, the far greater importance of this new discovery should be apparent to you.

It is not too much to say that witn-

INDEPENDENT OF THE WEATHER To no country in the world, with the possible exception of those few grass areas, such as Friesland and New Zealand, can the new process be of such advantage as to this, with our humid climate and our continual rainfall. The method is independent of the weather in point of fact in the of the weather-in point of fact, in the Finnish reports farmers are advised not to mow the material during the midsummer midday sun. The grass can be put into concrete silos of the simplest form. It has been elaborated in Finland, a country of exceedingly small farmers and exceedingly poor

Calculations both in Germany and in Finland have shown that the labour requirements per acre are no greater than in hay-making, but, owing to the differences in the hay-making proce dure in those countries and here the advantage would be with the silage storage. In order to get the full advantafige of the new technique it is necessary to cut the grass young, so that as the normal procedure would be to cut two, or in the rich districts three times a year, the labour requirements would be substantially less, inasmuch as the labour would be carried out over a more extended period. The French and German comparisons have been in labour per acre, but, in view of the incomparably greater amount in food nutrients per acre in the case of silage, the labour requirements per food unit will be reduced to at least one-half that necessary in the case of hay. "I think no one among you," Dr. Kennedy concluded, "whether he thinks that the production of winter milk is arm-chair farming or not, will regard, taking the country as a whole, present winter fodder conditions as satisfactory. It is enough for anybody who uses his eyes to travel through the country in mid-April and see the conditons of the cows or store stock at fairs, in order to get his mind clear on this subject. The malnutrition, which is but too apparent, has very servous economic results. In the first place it depresses the summer production when nutritious food is in abundance; in the second place, it is a serious danger from the point of view of inroads of disease in our herds. With our extraordinary favourable pasture conditions, and with a technique available which can make summer work and the gamble of hay-making is no longer necessary, and the very serious losses which it entails under the most favourable conditions can be avoided.

"It is as important in any industry to cut costs of production as to increase prices. Unfortunately the price of agricultural commodities is entirely beyond the control of any farmer. A decrease of 20 or 30 per cent, in production costs, however, is as valuable to the farmer as an increase in price of the same amount. As indicating the possibilities in the direction of reducis of interest. From heavy land English pasture he obtained a yield of grass cut at monthly intervals, which would represent sufficient food, even with a 10 per cent loss in utilisation, for the maintenance of a cow throughout the year and the production of 800 gallons of milk. If that is a possibility in England, is certainly is a possibility in our richer pasture areas.

"The new technique which I have endeavoured to put before you is regarded in Finland as of fundemental importance in the agricultural pregress of that country. To those countries who have gone far towards solv ing winter production problems the new technique is a help. To the farmers of this country, with its capacity for the cheap production of grass and its hitherto unsolved winter fodder problems, the new technique means a real revolution in our agriculture. a revolution in conformity with our pockets, our climatic conditions, and our traditional methods of farming

PAY OF GARDA.

At a meeting of the Garda of Dun-garvan District on Thursday, a unanimous protest was made against the proposed cut of 5 per cent. in their pay. In that protest they have the whole-hearted support of all peaceful people, who have long since realised the efficiency of the Gardai and the excellent manner in which they carry out their arduous duties without fear or favour. It is indeed a very poor compliment in view of all they have done to propose a reduction in their present pay. We hope the Minister of Finance will find some other means of balancing his Budget and that he will carry out his former promise not to interfere with the pay of the Gardai In their fight for justice the Gardai have the support of all who wish to see good work suitably recompensed.

Hurley v. Fitzgerald.
This was a civil bill for £14. 11s. 2d.
by Mr. M. Hurley, Ardmore, against Patrick Fitzgerald, fisherman, for ting a quarter share of the fish and 1d. in the lb. That went on for 3 years. It was only fair to his client to say that if Fitzgerald had carried on as usual his client would have been satisfied, but the defendant refused and Hurley had no alternative but to pro-seed for the balance due.

and the amount due nearly cleared off. Another season was bad and in the third the crew didn't fish properly, debt £22 is. 2d. at the end of the three years. Witness took over the nets and allowed £7 10s. 0d. for them. He would sell them now for £6. In the balance due was included a sum of £3 14s. 8d., lobster pots, which wit-ness had supplied at the end of the . The Minister's reply showed the salmon season. They were washed away off the Pier during a storm, the defendant making no attempt to save for Mallow, Queenstown, Fermoy and

The defendant said there was no didn't believe it was so much. He received a solicitor's letter from Mr. Keane. As regards the loss of the lobster pots, it was too dangerous to go on the pier, the weather was so bad. Up to five years ago there was a share allowed for the boat.

After a very protracted hearing, the Justice gave a decree for £10 16s. 6d., was carried by something in the na-ture of a partnership, starting with the capitalist who financed it. That and delivered. The plaintiff getting nothing but the profit on the ultimate sale of the fish. He disallowed the claim for the lobster pots lost in the Mr. McMahon said they were a storm. It was a well-known principle that when the act of God intervened a contract was cancellel. Nobody was required to risk his life to save property in a storm like that.

On the application of defendant, an order was made for the payment of the amount at 2s. 6d. per week.

Patrick Donovan, 18, labourer, Carrigtwohill, was brought up in custody on remand, charged with the lar-

J. Hornibrook said he left the coat in a cowhouse o fhis employer's at Barry's Court on the morning of Nov. 18th. He missed it on that evening. He paid 50s, for it 12 months ago. He hadn't used it much since.

Guard O'Donnell, Carrigtwohill,

gave evidence of a statement made and signed by the accused, in which he admitted taking the coat, leaving his own old makintosh instead. Hearing that the Guards were looking for him in connection with the matter he went back and returned the coat, his own being gone.

To the Court—He returned the coat on December 20th and was arrested on January 8th.

The accused pleaded guilty. He said he was 18 years of age, and lived with his father at Carrigtwohill. He had been working for farmers four years.

TRAINING A FIRE BRIGADE.

A SUGGESTION.

(EDITOR "THE DUNGARVAN OBSERVER." Dear Sir,-Time and again the seriousness of an outbreak of fire in our small towns is brought home to the public. Much damage, and perhaps serious loss of life could be prevented on such occasions with a little forethought-a matter of "preparedness" to cope with an outbreak.

Under the supervision of the S.S.O. the streets get a thorough cleaning on Fair Days. Would it not be feasible if the Council availed of the oppor tunity to train their workmen in the use of their Fire-engine by utilising it for such work, say, twice a year. This would ensure that the Engine was in working order at a minimum of expense, and at the same time train a number of men to be ready at a mo-ment's notice whenever an occasion arose to deal with an outbreak of fire. Yours faithfully,

A CITIZEN.

Patrick Fitzgerald, fisherman, for goods supplied.

Mr. T. K. Keane, solr., for plaintiff.

Mr. Keane said that was a case in which defendant owed plaintiff a balance of £14 11s. 2d., under a fishing agreement whereby Hurley, a merchant at Ardmore, rigged out defendant's boat for 3 years, the agreement of Pallichant Ardmore agreement of Pallichant being that Hurley was to be paid back happiest years of my life in Youghal the amount expended by him, by get and bid farewell to its people with very deep regret.

Housing Conditions.

Dr. Condy, Co. M.O.H., wrote stating that the Clinical Tuberculosis Officer had reported that Mrs. Broderick and her husband and 5 children were living and sleeping in one room with one bed in a house in Pewer's Court. The kitchen of the house was unfit for occupation and it was also reported that the roof of the room in which the family lived was leaking. It was considered that the present abode of the family was unsanitary and unfit for occupation and it was recommended that the Council take the necessary action in the matter.

Mr. Harrington-If the poor people are put out, where are they to go to? Mr. Whelan said it was appalling, but what could be done.

Mr. Broderick-It is a shocking state of affairs and something should be done to remedy it.

Church Holidays.

The resolution of the Leitrim Co.
Council regarding tChurch Holidays

The Clerk said there were too many holidays as it was. Mr. McMahon agreed. It was ridiculous. He proposed that the resolution be marked read.

The Chairman—How is it they don't object to Bank holidays?
The Clerk said that a great many worked on Church holidays. Only one section of the community didn't work on those days—the ordinary marked read.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING.

The Annual General Meeting of the Youghal Young Men's Society, was held in the Billiard Room, Town Hall, on Tuesday week.

In the unavoidable absence of the Rev. President Canon O'Donoghue, P.P., the Vice-President, Mr. P. J. O'Gorman, P.C., U.D.C.; took the chair, and there was a full attendance Mr. M. I. of members.

Rev. P. O'Gorman, C.M., All Hallows, were present.

The Chairman said he was pleased to see such a large attendance of mem bers, in spite of wind and weather. It showed the interest they took in their proud of him seconded by Mr. M. McCarthy.

Messrs. O'Gorman and Linehan, returned thanks for the renewed honour conferred on them. They would continue in the future, as they had in the past, to do their best for the welfare of the Society. The Vice-President cordially endorsed the tribute paid to their esteemed caretaker, Capt. Nagle, by the Hon. Sec., in his annual report.

The Chairman said it would be discorteous to our late Spiritual Director who has been closely connected with the committee on managing the affairs of this Society for many years were I to allow this occasion to pass withour paying some tribute on his departure to take over the pastorship of Ballyhea. Doctor Dinneen was a gentleman whose loss is greatly deplored, not alone in this Society, but by everyone | small . in this town irrespective of creed or to elaborate on his many good qualities—they are legion—nevertheless we cannot forget his activities for those who came under his spiritual charge. Many a person in this town in times of illness, will gratefully remember visits. In the men's Confraternity, of which he was director, many times we have listened to his brilliant lecture. We could have distingt the connection with making the title good would be.

The Board agreed to the Chairman's tures, brimful of sincerity and appeal, and followed intently with rapt atten-tion. Many towns have not been honoured by Churchmen of Dr. Dinneen's brilliance, his high intellectual powers and his gifts of oratory are known in many counties throughout our land. Perhaps his outstanding trait was his generosity to God's poor, his solicitude for their children. He gave but did not want it known. His quiet unostentatious self required no thanks. I feel were he with us to-night, he would demur at my eulogics of him—he dosen't need them, he felt it was his duty-but at least we owe him this dangerous. tribute. We shall miss him from our meetings, his straightforwardness with no deviation from the line he con sidered in the best interests of the Society, yet at all times willing to listen and give expression to those acting with him on the committee. We wish him many happy years in his new sphere of spiritual life, whilst re-gretting his departure from this old town, which he loved. At all times we

him, as we often hope to, the kindly feelings kindled by him shall be always remembered in Youghal and by none more than his sincere friends of the Youghal C.Y.M. Society.

shall feel the example he set us for straightforwardness of purpose, nobi-lity of mind and charitable instruc-tion. These traits shall act as a head-

As Hon, Sec., he availed of that opportunity of thanking Dr. Dinneen for all that he had done for that Society, including the contribution of many valuable books to the Library and money prizes to the Billiard Tournaments. Indeed, Dr. Dinneen helped in no small degree to bring the Society to its present satisfactory position financially and society. position, financially and socially. Mr. M. McCarthy, said he had met with Dr. Dinneen at meetings for the past 25 years, and he had found him, then as now, giving every latitude and fairness to his colleagues on the Conmittee. His interest in the Society was very great. His new parishoners at Ballyhea would be delighted and

Mr. J. Whelan, U.D.C., endorsed all that had been said of Dr. Dinneen. While in Youghal he laboured zeal-ously in his holy calling. He was loved by all and would be missed by

WHY ARE STAMPS STUCK AT THE RIGHT-HAND CORNER OF AN ENVELOPE?

When stamps were first introduced they were cancelled by a hand die, and for convenience the convention was adopted of placing them at the right corner. The Post Office has the power, though it is probably never excercised, of re. fusing to deliver a letter where the stamp is not properly placed.
