I. T. & G. Workers' Union.

ADDRESS BY MR. W. O'BRIEN, BRANCH ESTABLISHED IN DUNGARVAN.

A meeting of workers was held in the Town Hall, Dungarvan, on Friday, October 6th., to consider forming a Branch of the Irish Transport and General Workers' Union. Mr. Thos. McCarthy, U.D.C., presided, and the meeting was addressed by Mr. Wm. O'Brien, General Secretary of the Union. There was a very large attendance.

The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, referred to the need for organisation amongst the Dungarvan workers. He gave a concise sketch of the foundation of the Union in the town 15 years ago, and the great improvements which had been obtained for the workers of Dungarvan. Recently there had been many suggestions that a Branch should be again opened in the town, and it was for them now to decide whether they would have a Branch or not. They had present to address them Mr. Wm. O'Brien (loud applause). They all knew him through his association with the town in his boyhood days, and also through the great work he had done for Labour.

Mr. O'Brien, who was received with applause, said his earliest recollections of Dungarvan was as a boy when he went to the Christian Brothers' Schools in the Buttery. Because of that he always had a great affection for the town and its people, and when a Branch of the Union was established there in 1918 he was very pleased. He had visited the town on many occasions when they were fighting to improve their conditions, and he was always delighted to come to give them a helping hand. In those years they had witnessed an enormous improvement in wages and working conditions. They had all the workers in the town in receipt of the standard Trade Union wage. The Branch was, in fact, a model one. There was no need to go into detail as to the cause of its collapse. They were all only too well aware of it. The Branch had come to the help of others, and lost everything because of that generous impulse. It was not necessary for him to convince them of what Trade Unionism could do for them. They knew that. They were anxious to make a fresh start, and he was extremely glad to see so many old faces at the meeting. It was certainly a good augury for the future. Recently, when an application was received at Heat Office to open a Branch, instead of sending an organiser to do it, he (Mr. O'Brien) had volunteered to come himself, because of his past connection with Dungarvan, and his great desire to help the workers of the town in any way he could. The Union they were formerly members of was still to the fore and still going strong. It was a Union any body of workers can be proud of. For 25 years it had fought the battles of the workers of Ireland. Prior to the establishment of the Irish Transport and General Workers' Union we had the Unions for Tradesmen, but no national Union for labourers. The Irish Transport and General Workers' Union had done something that had never before been accomplished in Ireland. A great National Trade Union organisation had been established with a network of Branches in all the principal Cities and Towns, controlled by Irishmen, and with its Head Office and Executive in Ireland. It had a unique record of achievement in improving the wages and conditions of all classes of workers. It was in a position to give its members a service that no other Trade Union in Ireland could give. It was based on the principle that "An Injury to One is the Concern of All." Its outlook was inspired by the work and sacrifice of the man who shaped its policy and guided its work in its early years up to Easter Week 1916. James Connolly. Here is what Connolly wrote of the Union in 1913:—

"It found the workers of Ireland on their knees, and has striven to raise them to the erect position of manhood. It found them with all the vices of slavery in their souls, and it strove to eradicate these vices, and replace them with some of the virtues of freedom; it found them with no other weapons of defence than the arts of the liar, the kick-spittle and the toady, and it combined them and taught them to abhor these arts and rely proudly on the defensive power of combination."

That was written during the Lock-out in Dublin in 1913. That struggle lasted more than six months and attracted world-wide attention. Practically all the employers in Dublin banded themselves together, pledged to wipe out the Irish Transport and General Workers' Union. They had the active support of the forces of the British Government, the daily Press, both the Unionist and the Home Rule Parties. Yet they were unable to break the Union, although they appeared to be successful for the time being. In a short time the workers pulled themselves together and built up the organisation once more. After Easter Week, 1916, when the name of James Connolly enabled the Union to spread its forces throughout the country, the Organisation went from strength to strength, and victory to victory, until it had 350 Branches and over 100,000 members. It was engaged in a continuous series of fights to improve the condition of its members. It poured out its funds without stint in support of its members, and in the 5 years, 1919-1923, spent in Dispute Benefit no less than £200,000, or an average of one thousand Pounds per week for a period of five years. It had done that on the pennies and shillings subscribed by its members, which was its only source of income; yet to-day its Credit Balance exceeded £90,000! That was an achievement that any body of Irish workers could be proud of. That showed what Irish working men and women could do. And yet we had workers in this country who had so little faith in themselves that they joined English Unions, sent their money across the water, and were controlled by executives sitting in London or Manchester, on which the Irish members, if they were in a hopeless minority. And when these workers were in difficulty, they had the strange spectacle of Englishmen, Scotsmen or Welshmen coming over to show the Irish how to fight! Stranger still, very many of the workers who did so claimed that it was the inalienable right of the Irish people to govern their own affairs as a Nation but apparently the Irish working class were incompetent to govern their own Trade Unions. The I.T. & G.W. Union took issue with that view and maintained that they should have their own separate Trade Unions, controlled by Irishmen and women in Ireland, in the same way as every other independent country had. They had no hostility or illwill against English Unions. They would be always ready to co-operate with them in matters of common concern, but the most useful service they could render the Irish workers would be to leave them alone. The I.T. & G.W. Union was not alone strong on the industrial field, but it was active on the political arena also. It realised that Labour must fight with both arms, the industrial and the political. Both were important, and neither could be neglected if Labour was to safeguard its interests. The Union was affiliated to the Irish Labour Party, and of the eight Labour members of the Dail, five of them were members of the I.T. & G.W. Union, as were also three of the six members of the Senate. That showed the important and influential position occupied by their Union. Their Union was also active on the International side, and was affiliated with the International Federation of Transport workers, and the International Federation of Public Employees.

He hoped if they decided to re-open a Branch that might that it would prosper, and that they would win back the ground that had been lost in the past 8 or 10 years. He would not make them any rosy promises, or undertake to perform any miracles, but he had no doubt that if they displayed the same spirit as in the years 1918-1923, the same enthusiasm, loyalty, and solidarity, it would not be long before the Branch was once again the same power for good that it was in its early days. There should be no recriminations as to past events. Let bygones be bygones. Let them look to the future, and build on sound lines. Let them remember that the working-class marches from defeat to victory, and that out of the reverses of the past comes the knowledge and wisdom to plan and fight for success in the future.

At the conclusion of Mr. O'Brien's speech it was decided unanimously to form a Branch of the Union, and Mr. Thomas McCarthy, volunteered to act as Secretary until Officers and Committee were appointed.

Important Notice.

We wish to call the attention of our customers and the general public to the fact that we have erected a Waterworth Patent Kilm at considerable expense to treat the native Grain when it is intended on us to mix with Maize. Under the new Cereals Bill the quantity of this Amixture has been raised by a recent order of the Department of Agriculture from 10 per cent. to 15 per cent.

Owing to this increased percentage to secure good sound Meal, the Kilndrying of the home-grown Grain is in our opinion absolutely necessary. We therefore guarantee that the quota of native Grain used by this Firm in the Amixture will be Kilndried. This combined with the slow grinding at our Water-power Mill at Kilsdangan, should secure a first-class article.

We shall supply Maize Meal with the stipulated Amixture of either OATS or BARLEY. In the case of BARLEY being used a slight increase in price will be required.

As the percentage of amixture of Home-Grown Grain fixed on July 24th at 25 per cent. has been further increased to 33.33 per cent. to come into force on October 9th, the KILN DRYING of native grain is still more necessary. Combined with KILN DRYING all native grain we have been dehulling the Oats since the increase of July 24th last.

Finally, we find the percentage of moisture in the new crop much in excess of that in last season's crop.
