Christmas in Cappoquin

A QUIET BUT HAPPY FESTIVAL.

The Christmas of 1933 can be safely described as one of the quietest spent in Cappoquin for many years.

The prevailing depression in the country, and the consequent shortage of money everywhere, were dominant factors in depriving this year's event of many of the scenes of gaiety and festivity hitherto associated with the great Feast of Christmas, but, for all that, it proved a fairly happy Christ-mas on the whole. The various shops in the town never presented a gayer or more tempting picture than they did this year, and reflected the great-est credit on all those responsible for the wonderful and artistic decorations seen everywhere, while trade was, naturally, on the restricted side, still the amount of business transacted in the various houses, especially during the closing days of last week, was as good as could have been expected under the circumstances, and we can only hope that matters will have vastly improved, and that the country generally will be in a far more prosperous condition before next Christmas arrives.

No matter how poor the people may be, the vast majority will insist on having the usual Xmas turkey for dinner, and in this respect our local Poultry Merchants, Messrs. J. O'Connor and Sons, had a record time, for in addition to shipping huge quantities of turkeys, geese and fowl to the English markets for the past month, they had also to cope with a heavy home demand and were completely cleared out of all classes of supplies by last Friday. Xmas Eve falling on Sunday this year had, undoubtedly, a good deal to do with the general air of peace and orderliness observed on all sides, and there was a good deal of justification there was a good deal of justification year had, undoubtedly, a good deal to there was an entire absence of drunk-ness, or anything approaching dis-master of the stripendary Magnetics.
