CANTINE INSTINCT—
A striking example of Canine Instinct was demonstrated recently at Ardmore. While a Cork visitor was looking over the sea wall at a short of fish, his fox-terrier pup, aged three months, fell off the sea wall into the water below. The tide, which was at its height was beginning to recede and had carried the pup some distance out before anyone realised it was missing. The owner thought there was no missing. At a social entertainment in Bonmahon quite recently I heard a man called an old fool in a disparaging way. But in the distant past, it was a privilidge to belong to the Order of Fools, founded by Adolphus, Count of Cleves, in 1381. Though bearing a designation now savouring of absurdity, the members of which the Order was composed were noblemen and gentlemen of the highest rank and renown, who formed themselves into a body for humane and charatible purposes. The Order of Fools appears to have existed down to the beappears to have existed down to the beginning of the sixteenth century, but the object for which it was originally established were gradually lost sight of. In the heyday of its benevolent activities the brotherhood, according to records did much good service. They also engaged in convival and social objects.

The insignia borne by the knights of the Order consisted of the figure of a jester embroidered on the left side of their mantles and depicted dressed in a red and silver vest with a cap and bells on his head, yellow stockings, a cup filled with fruits in his right hand and in his left a gold key A grand Court was held once a year extending over seven days when all matters pertaining to the Order were duly dis-
