COAST TO COMERAGH CHIPS

An Appreciation. — Last week's number of the "Observer" carried the announcement of the death of Mr. John Connery, ex-N.T., Abbeyside, Dungarvan, and the sad event removes from his native West Waterford a man who deservedly enjoyed a very wide popularity and who was a genuine Irish-Irelander and the ideal teacher. The zeal he brought to bear in his work and the scrupulous care and efficiency he displayed in the instruction of the several generations of pupils that he put through his hands, bore rich firuit, as many of them to-day occupy leading positions in various walks of life at home and abroad. He never neglected to also inculcate in their growing minds those grand principles.

The even unsafe for pedestrians by day-leading positions in various walks of life at home and abroad. He never neglected to also inculcate in their growing minds those grand principles. growing minds those grand principles of head and character that made the true man and the good christian, and edil, no matter where their lot is cast, will, on learning of his demise, breathe a sigh of grief and a prayer for his gentle soul. The late Mr. Connery was a fluent native speaker and a life-long sterling supporter of the games and pastimes of the Gael. Ever at hand to give assistance, his charity, his winning smile, his strong encouragement was a constant source of help to the many in whose welfare he took an abiding and kind interest, especially those of less fortunate circumstances. And as he lived—so he died—with the true man and the good christian, and same saintliness, the same joviality,

Everything was being reserved for the cities and the rural areas were being neglected, resulting in an unprecedented flight from the land. Every day one saw cows being sent to the canning factories. Fine Gael had a plan to ensure an economic price for agricultural workers. Mr. Lemass had stated in Medical Planck.

- . Wheat is still our greatest need. Any substantial decrease in this year's acreage may leave us short of bread next winter. For this reason the sowing of wheat should be continued up to the last possible day permitted by local conditions.
- 2. Increased production of oats and barley is also required and farmers should concentrate on these crops when wheat sowings are completed.
- 3. Maincrop potatoes can be sown later than cereal crops. The need for potatoes may be greater than ever and all available land should be planted with this crop.
