ALL EYES ON THURLES

AMIDST a wave of mounting tension the battle for the blue riband of Munster hurling attains a climax. And straightaway let it be said that champions Waterford who have yet to wear the crown in successive years, and Tipperary, the heirs to an imperishable tradition, are capable of contriving as tense and vibrant a decider as has ever adorned the showpiece of the Southern hurling calendar.

Munster final looks wide open

Safe it is, too, to assume that historic Thurles will accommodate every Waterford man who wants to see his team finally joined on Sunday afternoon.

But the average Waterford follower views the outcome with almost inordinate reserve—a tendency that can be attributed to the fact that this will be the team's first serious championship test of the year—and by and large the inclination is to steer clear of an outright forecast.

Of this we are certain, though the wearers of the white and blue will take the field tuned to concert pitch and prepared to give their very all in quest of victory. No county would wish more from its standard-bearers.

Waterford's standing in the hurling world is open to question these days, inconsistency has been the greatest bug bear since the All-Ireland defeat, the standard of performance having alternated from great to appalling while the continued inability of certain players to regain their touch has given rise to no little amount of criticism.

Against Kerry in the only championship outing to-date our representatives showed not the slightest semblance of provincial title-holders, then came an encouraging effort versus Kilkenny only to be followed by another mediocre performance against Cork the other night. It would appear that one hundred fold may be bettered one hundred fold if the championship is to be retained.

But then the knowledge that they will be up against it and that their title will be in real jeopardy could easily steer the wearers of the white and blue to another match-winning effort.

Remember too, that Waterford hurling ability remains undoubted on real counts for concern rests with the players' failure to strike top form together.

The Waterford team, which contains fourteen of the men who helped to win the championship twelve months ago, has been fairly well received.

The established rear-guard of Cunningham, Flynn and Brennan is a new force in itself. Power of Dungarvan much will hinge on how the Old Boro man who has given several fine exhibitions in the last championship over the years, acquiesces himself. We wish him well.

Jackie Condon, a great defender by any standards and Mick Lacey stand to the right and left of Martin O'Riordan. But the ease with which Cork's Paddy Barry gave the 50 at Shon man the run around the other night has greatly perturbed followers and Lacey's rather inoffensive marking would, in my mind, be less apparent if he were not a mid-fielder. The presence of Joe Harvey, who had such a great game against Cork, could work out to our advantage in this sector.

Although English and Nealon were heroes in the semi-final victory, I cannot visualise the Tipperary mid-fielding cutting much ice against Phil Grimes.

Munster Hurling Finals at Thurles SUNDAY NEXT, JULY 6th. Minor Hurling PORTLAIRGE v. LUIMNEACH at 2 p.m. (S.T.). Senior Hurling PORTLAIRGE v. TIOBRAD ARAINN at 3.30. For details of special trains consult C.I.E. announcements.

But it would be foolhardy to imagine that victory will be won by a maximum effort. Tipperary, he it remembered, are among the greatest battlers in the game, strong, determined and fearless hurkers who will use every legitimate means at their disposal to achieve a distinction that has eluded them since 1951. Having put paid to Limerick and Cork in turn, Tipperary folk are confident that they are on the brink of another golden era.

And when one reckons with the hurling prowess of the Doyles, Maher, Finn, English, Devaney and Nealon, the formidable nature of Waterford assignment becomes really apparent.

Wins who may, there is a stirring hour in store. Need it be said that the men charged with maintaining our eminent hurling name deserve the full throated support of every son of Portlairge.

MINORS STIFF TASK

Although the team named to Waterford's task is very apt to duty would appear to be a parent. Several mentors have staged definite improvement on the side. Several trials and have had success in the opening round. Waterford could thoughts about several minors will be rank outsiders members of the team, but it is when they cross camans with highly debatable if the fifteen Limerick in the under eighteen still measure up to championship winning standards.

Juvenile title for Dun Thuaidh

Dungarban Thuaidh 3-2. Na Misteralagh 4-1. At half time Dun Thuaidh led by 4-2 to 2-0 but a quick goal on the resumption made the big following stir apart from a few spasmodic attacks by the losers the followers from Dun Thuaidh saw their team win in a classic display of hurling to the end. Mornie Coward, Paddy Rossiter (2-0) M. Mahony (1-1) J. Lynch (1-0).

CORK FLATTERED Footballers fine performance

The men immediately concerned with Cork's defence of the Munster football crown were almost beside themselves with anxiety when they trooped in for the interval breather during Sunday's semi-final battle at the Fitzgerald Park, Fermoy.

And not without good cause, for challenging Waterford had slashed the Rebels' early advantage—it was 0-6 to 0-1 after twenty-two minutes—in an insecure point in the space of full-blooded football high on the half-hour.

The rattled champions had dramatically shed the veil of invincibility, panicking visibly in the face of a five minute onslaught and rampant Waterford had struck back with all the verve and confidence of likely winners.

This was the pulsating pattern unfolded in the minutes preceding the temporary break in hostilities.

But the wearers of the vivid red were a revitalised side at they came forth to hammer out their expected victory in the second half, the trend of which was akin to public anticipation.

The minutes immediately following the resumption yielded a brace of points for Cork and the inevitable goal followed just under the three-quarters mark, the Rebels passage to the final, which they have contested without intermission since 1947, was virtually assured.

That Cork, the better footballers, deserved to prevail is above dispute. Galbally though the losers strove, they could not match the majestic fielding of the powerful Leaders which was a treat to watch and in all probability the biggest single factor in their march to the decider. The winners, too, kicked strongly if not always justifiably and their obvious advantage in match experience was to prove a not inconsiderable factor in the decisive second half.

On the run of play, though, the final margin of seven points was more than a trifle unkind to the challengers.

Waterford played a fair amount of good football. But they lacked a set plan of campaign, a chronic handicap against a side of the hurlers' great ability, while the tendency to kick aimlessly under pressure—a not unusual failing in a side that had little or no opportunity to develop teamwork—played right into the hands of the much bigger Cork men.

All in all, however, this was a creditable performance from a side that was merely fulfilling a future, as the critics had it. With a strong cross-wind blowing good football a hazardous assignment it was not surprising that the standard of performance provided little to write home about. Nonetheless, the changes were kept and, and the exemplary spirit of give and take which prevailed greatly added to the game's entertainment value.

Although the marking was a little slack at times, the Waterford backs in general defended stoutly.

Goalman Sean Ormonde enhanced his already big reputation, courageously handling a spate of troublesome shots, and Matty Moroney, who had a great half, secured a full line of defence that was unyielding to the end.

Tom Bermingham was the outstanding man in a half line that set somewhat short of expectations. Centre half Tom Cannon, though he impressed after an uncertain opening, obviously felt the effects of the previous evening's hustling encounter, while Paddy Donnelly's lack of pace was apparent on the wing. A change of positions might have worked out to the advantage of both men.

At mid-field Aisín O'Faolain and Pat O'Connell performed with distinction in turn, breaking the long-standing Ryan-Moore partnership in the process.

But Waterford's match of the match to my mind, was that forward Tom McCarthy, who was a footballer to his fingertips, played delightfully, kicked shrewdly and continuously outfielded the immediate opposition. Whyte, Monty Guiry and Billy Kirwan's speed and ball control was an almost potent factor when he moved inside in the second half.

The winners, a well-balanced combination as usual, had men of exceptional merit in Tim Callaghan, Paddy Harrington, Eric Ryan, Nial Fitzgerald, Joe O'Sullivan and Tom Furlong.

The scores were: Cork, 10-10; Waterford, 6-8. O'Connell (0-4), Con O'Sullivan (0-3), Joe O'Sullivan (0-2), T. Furlong (1-1), O'Faolain (0-1), and Tom Power (1-0).

SUNDAY'S PROGRAMME

Scoreboard

S.F.—Cork, 1-11; Waterford, 1-4. Despite a great performance by the losers' mid-fielder, Johnny Murphy, who hit 1-3 off his own hurley, Dungarvan won their unexpected victory over Cathal Brugha's in the minor championship on Monday night. But the Blues will have to step up greatly on this performance if they are to even trouble champions Abbeyside in the next round. The final score was: Dungarvan 3-1; Cathal Brugha's 2-3.

Waterford, fielding what was virtually their championship fifteen, and Cork played out a draw in a senior hurling challenge at Waterford on Saturday last. The score at the end of an entertaining hour's hurling was: Waterford 3-11; Cork, 6-8.
