Jury of the Queen's County. Mr. Mac Nally, for the Crown, stated, that the complaint he had to lay before the Court and Jury, on the part of his Client, contained the grounds on which the Grand Jury of that respectable county had thought just and proper to find Bills of Indictment against the Traversers at the Bar, W. Walsh and E. Price. The charge was an assault and battery of the Rev. Philip Connolly, a Catholic Clergyman, and Coadjutor to the Parlsh Priest of Mountrath, where the Traversers resided. It was an offence that required serious attention and minute investigabase and cowardly manner, was a fact upon which no doubt could be raised, for the evidence on that fact was unequivocal; but whether he was struck by either of the Pisoners would be a question, under all the circumstances of evidence, for the Jury to determine, and whatever their verdict may be, whether guilty, or not guilty, he was confident it would be consistent with the solemp, the sacred oath they had taken: such a verdict as they could justify to the feelings of conscience, and as would give satisfaction to public justice. The assault charged could not be the result of personal animosity. Mr. Connolly was almost a stranger in Mountrath; besides, he was a young Clergyman of the mildest demeano and excellent manners, incapable of giving offence, and who, like his Divine Preceptor, the Saviour of Mankind, not only preached peace and good-will to man, but, by his example, inculcated the conduct which should mark the progress of Christians through life. It was he said, with great reluctance, that, in addressing the Court and Jury, he found it necessary to be retrospective to the conduct of a certain set of men who resided in Mountrath, a darkish night. in order to show the Judge, who had not before been on this Circuit, but whom every honest man must wish to see again, that there were in that town | was struck." a set of Irreligious, profane, and cruel miscreant comblustors, who waged war against the preachers of the Christian doctrine, and by doing so, might be fairly charged with waging war against Heaven. The men he alluded to had persecuted the late Reverend Mr. Duane, Catholic predecestor to Mr. Connollyeven to death. They had not actually murdered him by manual force, or by deadly weapon, or by the subtilty of polson; but they had so malevolently and inhumanly treated and persecuted that Gentleman, against whom no man could have genuine cause of complaint, that his death was the consequence. In speaking of these unthinking and unfeeling men, he did not in the slightest degree allude to the Protestants of Mountrath and its vicinage. No, he spoke of immoral conspirators, men destiprinciples of Protestantism, which teaches its discipler to love God above all things, and our neighbours as ourselves. But these men were politicians, whose principal aim it was to set man against man, and to abolish not only civil but religious liberty, and to establish anarchy and confusion, under the pretence, the false pretence, of zealous lovalty.-From such men-add it to the Litany, " Good as entitled to protection, and his persecutors to pumishment, and the finding by the Grand Jury shewed, that the informations and witnesses examined on the part of the Crown had established probable cause to charge the Prisoners, and put them ou trial. The assault and battery, it would appear, was on the 26th day of October last; and on the 28th of the same month a special meeting of the

on the great as well as the poor. The Rev. Philip Connolly, who appeared a very young Clergyman, was then sworn, and was examined by Mr. John D'Arcy. He stated that, on the night of Saturday, the 26th of October, he was a pediar, and went first to sell goods. On his going going into a house in Coote-street, Mountrath, about the hour of eight o'clock, when he met Edword Price, the man standing at the bar-Price had a slip of deal in his hand, which was perforated in the end with four or five nalls-Price asked him three times, with an insulting tone of voice, " what do you want?"-to which he, the Witness, answered, " I do not want you." Mrs. Drury, at whose house this passed, said to Price, " that is the Priest;" upon which Price immediately went out, as he, the Witness, also did in five minutes after. On going out of the door, he saw Price and another person standing on each side of the door, and another person a few yards from them, on the street lending to where he lodged. This person bid him " good night," and he returned the salutation kindly-when, after walking a few paces together, he struck him a violent blow on the face with his left hand, which cut him on the mouth. On this the Witness ran and called for assistance, and on creditors? -A. day, and the 4th of November, the business was investigated, and informatious taken; so that the knowledged no distinction; its correction fell up-the middle, and that was the person who struck him. T Cross-examined by Mr. Greene.

The night was light, and he believed the moon was up-Mrs. Drury dealt in spirits, but his business to her house was a professional duty—he could not say who struck him, but he was positive it was the man who stood in the middle of the three-he never had a dispute with any of them. Many other questions were put to the Witness, which he auswered with mildness and candour.

Mrs. Drury was then examined by Mr. Mac Nallu. She stated, that she certainly told Mr. Price, that the person he addressed with the words, " What do you want?" was the Priest-she desired a person who was in her house to see if those outside were following the Priest-Roe said they were-she instantly ran out, and in a few minutes met three persons, one of whom the Priest said had struck him —the distance was not more than twenty yards from her house—she named the younger Mr. Cornelius, as one of the persons she saw - but she declared she tion. That Mr. Connolly had been assaulted in a knew not who struck. This woman gave her testimony in a manner very extraordinary, and as in a state of trepidation: and the Judge took great pains in examining her, as did several of the Jury.

Mr. Bell said, he would ask her some questions. merely to obviate an insinuation from Mr. Mac Nally, against the Protestants of the town of Mount-

The Judge mid, no such insinuation had been made by the Learned Counsel alluded to-the very contrary was his position, and his statement was troly impartial.

Mr. Mac Nally thanked the Judge-said he never asinuated, but always spoke out. It was not to Protestants he alluded, but to club politicians, who, assuming the name of Orangemen, were promoting discord, and attempting to divide the Protestant and Catholic interest, which, he trusted in God, would henceforth be found one and the same.

The Traverser called Mr. Cornelius, jun.-He admitted that Price and Edwards were in the street -he saw them, but he did not see either of them strike the Priest. There was no moon-light, A was

On his cross-examination, he said. " I do not know who struck the Priest"-" I do believe he

The Learned Judge, in his charge, observed, that blow was cruelly inflicted on Mr. Connolly was beyond all doubt-and the circumstances disclosed by evidence were very strong against the prisoner Walsh, and on those the Jury would have to deliberate; for nothing appeared that could attach guilt to Price.—Here his Lordship recapitulated the evidence. He felt extremely sorry, and every man must regret, that a Clergyman of the Catholic Religion should be treated with contumely, or assaulted, as was certainly the case here. The Catholic Religion is professed by a large part of the People, who are entitled to the protection of the law in common, and to the same extent, with all others of the King's subjects. That the Pricet was struck was in full proof, and wantonly struck, but then tute of religion, and who must be ignorant of the | it did not appear that the party who assaulted him knew him to be a Priest; if it did so appear, that would be a very great aggravation of the offence, and would call for very exemplary punishment. GAOL DELIVERY.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1.

REFORE THE RECORDER OF DUBLIN. Calen Fowler was arraigned and tried on ar dictment, charging, that he, on the 1st day of March last, not having the fear of God before his res, but being moved by the instigation of the Devil, wickedly, feloniously, and of malice aforethought, killed and murdered Thomas Fagan, by thrusting a hot poker into his mouth, whereby he ly pressed him, and followed him to the door, and gave him a mortal wound in the wind-pipe, of which but they were all carried by a vast majority.

he instantly died. Patrick Breen, examined by Mr. Greene. Said, he knew Thomas Fagan, who is dead, and rho lived in Swan-alley, Thomas-street; he was in a room with the deceased when Calen Fowler came , advanced on Fagan, and said, "Fagan are you there?" He had in his hand a small forge poker, for you went among them. Where did you go next? | which was red hot; the deceased faised up his hands and exclaimed, " what are you about Calen?" and Q. Q. Can you account for this sudden frenzy, this madness?-A. Yes; he was offended because Fa gan had set a grate badly for him.

Mr. Rooney, a Surgeon, examined the wound nd said it was the cause of Fagan's death. Thomas Fagan, the elder, said the prisoner's James Roche said the poker was used in the force that day. He described the prisoner to be very outrageous, and attempted to force the elder Fagan's door; that he came into the forge, tool the poker, and got into the room, the door having been opened.

Mr. Bethel asked him a few questions. The Recorder defined the crime of murder, and gave the legal definition of malice. The fact, hi said, stood uncontroverted by any evidence whatever; and if the Jury believed the witnesses, they were bound to convict the prisoner. The Jury immediately brought in a verdict of-

FROM THE DUBLIN EVENING POST OF THE 4TH.

On last Sunday night, a dispute arose in Mr. Hynes's Tavern in Exchequer-street. At the monent, a Constable of the name of Manning, belonging to the Police-Office, Duke-street, was passing through the street, and, being attracted by the noise, he went into the house, to preserve, as he said, the King's peace. But he behaved in so inproper a manner as to excite the indignation of even all the Gentlemen present, who were not implicated in the dispute. Among others Colonel Colquhoun and Captain Hilliard, (who were mere spectators) rould not endure his audacious conduct, and therefore they expostulated with the constable, desiring him to discharge his duty according to law, and threatening to complain to the Magistrates of the district, if he should not desist from his insolence .-Manning immediately took a warrant from his pocket, and cried out-" Here is my authorityome with me, and I will bring you to the Magistrates." Colonel Colquboun and Captain Hilliard went with him, but the fellow, instead of conducting them to the Magistrates, brought the Gentlemea to St. Andrew's watch-house, and forcibly put them into confinement. The Gentlemen were immediately liberated on bail, but the very next day the constable had the audacity to charge those highly respectable gentlemen with robbery, and to persevere in every species of the grossest audacity. The fellow was dismissed, but their Worships, the Magistrates of Duke-street Office, did not carry their indignation further, in consequence, it is supposed, of the ntercession of a Citizen of Dublin, who appeared at the Office to speak in favour of such a ruffian.

CLONMEL, APRIL 4 .- On Monday night last, a number of fellows attacked the house of a man of the name of Rockett, between Carrick and Clones. They pulled off part of the thatch, and threw in the chimney; but being afraid to enter the house, they fired through the opening in the roof, and killed a child of about four years old in its mother's arms, a ball having passed through its neck. The cause of this attack on Rockett was his having lately taken some ground in the above neighbourhood.

On the same night an old man of the name of Read was dragged out of his house at Carrick, and beat unmercifully; his son came at length to his relief, and repelled the aggressors with a pitchfork.-Clonmel Advertiser.

On Tuesday week, in consequence of a requisition presented to the High Bailiff, signed by more han three hundred of the principal inhabitants of Birmingham, a very respectable Meeting of Merchants and Manufacturers, consisting of not fewer than seven hundred, was held at the Royal Hotel in that town, " to take into consideration the expediency of petitioning the Legislature on the subject of the Orders in Council;" when, after a very animated debate, which did great credit to the talents and patriotism of several of the speakers, ten spirited Resolutions, declarative of the right and duty of British subjects to discuss political questions, and of the injustice and ruinous tendency of the Orders in Council, were agreed to, and Petitions for their immediate revocation were ordered to be presented. to both Houses of Parliament. A very feeble of position to some of the Resolutions was attempted,

On the 7th, the Quarter Sessions for the County of Dublin commenced at the Court-house, Kilmainham, before Mr. Sericant Moore, several Magistrates, and a very respectable Grand Jury. The Learned Judge, in a most excellent Charge, took a view of the present situation of the County, which he described as being kept in continual terror, by midnight robbers. He was happy, however, that plunder appeared to be their only object, and that there was no ground even to suspect that any seditious association existed. He then, in a perspicuous manner, iaid down the law enacted by the White-Boy Statutes, within which, persons assuming any name or denomination, as Defenders, Threshers, &c. become delinquents.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY. Thomas Griffin and Patrick O'Carrol were tried for highway robbery. The indictment charged, that they, on the 18th day of March, in the 52d year of the reign of our Lord the King, to wit, with pistols, &c. at the Parish of Glassnevin, in the County of Dublin, did forcibly and feloniously make an assault on William Hunter, and put him in fear; and one umbrells, one great-coat, an eyeglass, &c. did forcibly from his person take, and carry away, against the peace of the King.

Mr. Greene parrated the circumstances of the case, which after appeared in evidence: observing, that the prosecution was carried on by the Police. As Counsel for the Defendants were, by the policy of the law, precluded from stating a case, he had avoided all deduction and animadversion.

Mr. William Hunter, examined by Mr. Greene. Said he resided at Finglas-Bridge-on the 18th of March, in the evening, he was returning from Duhlin-it was seren o'clock-the two Prisoners came up to him-they put pistols to his head-they both demanded his money-he knocked Griffin down with his fist-Carrol then tripped him, and he fell on his back-they both struck him on the head with their pistols—he received four cuts—they took from him a surtout coat-it was Griffin took It - Griffin seized it, and said, " You bloody thief, you must give this cont"-he refused, saying, "There are papers in it"-they took also from him, a two and sixpenny piece, and two tenpennles-(he here described the papers)-identified a parchment produced, and which was bloody-he heard Griffin say, "We will blow the bloody villain's brains out, for making this resistance"-on which he rushed on.

Cross-examined by Mr. Mac Nally. I can have no doubt, Sir, on the truth of your testimony, but memory is not infallible.

Q. Had you dined?-A. No. Q. Were you perfectly sober? A. Yes.

Q. Then will you my you cannot possibly be mistaken? A. I am positive they are the men-I described them to the Magistrate, and knew them the instant I saw them.

James Armstrong, examined by Mr. Greene. Apprehended Griffin-he had a surtout coat on his arm-the other prisoner was seized by another person-took a pistol from Griffin's breast, drew the charge, which was powder, without ball-on Carrol he found the papers-on Griffin some silver and a pocket-book were found-on Carrol a powder-horn with powder.

Mr. Hunter again examined by Mr. Mac Nally. Q. You say each had a pistol? A. Yee, Carrol had a horse pistol.

Q. But you hear now that one pistol only was got, and that not loaded (A. 1 J. Armstrong, examined by Mr. Bethel.

He considered mat a man might be mistaken. The Prisoners called no Witnesses, either to controvert the facts sworn to, or to character-saving.

they were strangers from the County Meath. The Judge recapitulated the Evidence-observing, that the whole depended on the credit of Mr. Hunter, and corroborating circumstances, of finding the surtout coat on one Prisoner, and the papers taken out of it on the other. The Jury, after retiring for a few minutes.

brought in a verdict, against each Prisoner, of-Gallty. The Indictment was then read to them—and being asked, by the Clerk of the Peace, what they had to say, why judgment of death and execution should not be awarded against them, and not offering any matter in arrest of judgment, sentence of douth was immediately pronounced.

In doing this, the Learned Serjeant, in language humane and pathetic, exhorted the unhappy convicts to prepare for death. He observed on the state of the County of Meath, particularly about Garristown, whence miscreants were daily issuing to plander the property of the industrious; but the Law would be found too strong for any banditti or confederacy of such villains-it had been found effectually so in the South-it would be found so in every part of the Nation. Of mercy in this world they could have no hope; their days were numbered, and they were but few. Repentance and atonement would recommend them to Almighty God. They were condemned to be hanged by the neck until dead. They called for a long day, but were informaed by the Court that was impossible, considering the circumstances of the case.

Patrick Carrol and John Smith were indicted on several charges, against Stat. 14 and 15 Geo. III. called the Whitehoy Act, and also for robbing the house of Margaret Rogers, widow, and robbing Hugh Rogers of a double-barrelled gon, at Baldwinstown, county Dublin, on the 4th of March last. Mr. Greene stated a case, and then examined Hugh Rogers.

The Witness said he lived with his mother, Margaret Rogers, at Baldwinstown; her house was at- the legality of the soutence.

tacked on the 4th of March, between ulse and ten o'clock; he was in bed; the seeles were all braken; the persons outside fired several shots, and called for arms; they threatened to burn the bound : they attacked the roof, and turn off the thatch; can't say any got through the reof; he took up a two-barrel gan and went to the window, when a man in the garden fired at him; they demanded admittance for one; he refused; they called for arms; he handed out the two-harrel gun. Under his mother's advice, he opened the door, and the banditti rushed in, armed with pistols; he was positive that the Prisoner, Smith, was one; Smith wanted to shoot him, but was prevented by another, who said, "" we will have so merder"; he was positive, that Carrol was also there; Smith carried out a piece of frize; all were equally busy in energing off the chattels; they got candles in the house, and lighted three or four; they took off all the wearing apparel, some watches, a powder flash, bed-clothes, four pounds in silver, &c. &c .- He would know every man who came in; he now aroun or eight he had a conversation with Smith about his gen; they remained two hours; they carried of the goods.

Cross-examined by Mr. Max Hally. He necessarily in the most positive many errating to the identity of the Polissons, and mid he would be equally positive to every one of the se-ven or eight persons who reshed in.

Robert Rogers, examined by Mr. Greens. Correborated his brother in the cist the attack, threats, &c. He identified the Principle ners, and swore that Smith struck him, and these trued to shoot him—be found a pair of his own shors on Smith.

Mary King .-- The Hore with her bushend in Balllano-Carrol ledged there.

Cross-examined by Mr. Noc Nally. I'll ask you a few questions, pro hone publice-Were you put into prison?—A. 8 was conford. Q. Was your bustened imprisoned !- A. Yes :

Q. What is be?-A. A labor Q. So the Poller did not hold him, though stolen goods were get in his honer ?-- A. He will man be rich enough; he kept a coutron in the burrack, and will have three bundred guineus. Q. The produce of stolen goods; is it so?-No handsome managures, and well clothed troops! It is impossible for any troops to have a more manmificent appearance than those regiments, whose existence is to be dated from the establishment of the Grand Duchy of Warsaw; they rival the afficient legions, and most warlike and best disciplined soldiers of France. These brave men appear to regret leaving Spain, the climate of which they much like; they speak with the most sovereign contempt of the hands which they name Guerillas. All is in motion in our town. Whilst on the one side it is encumbered with foreign troops returning from Spain, and a considerable number of Spaniards, who are to be conducted to the interior of France; on the other, the speedy arrival of a great number of troops, proereding from Toulouse to Spain, is announced. At Perpignan several regiments are expected, on the same destination.

PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. APRIL 10.

On the motion of Mr. MILLS, a Committee was appointed to search the Lords Journals for the prooredings of the Peers on a Bill relative to the erection of County Infirmaries in Ireland. HIGH PRICE OF BREAD.

Mr. CURWEN said, " Seeing the Right Hon. Gentleman (Mr. Perceval) in his place, I feel myself reloctantly called upon to intreat his attention to the present high price of grain. They refuciantly, because I am fully aware, that extreme caution should be used in mentioning any thing that may be likely to create alarm on so serious a subject as a scarcity of provisions-[Hear ! hear !] - But, impressed as I am with its importance, I could not excess myself, if I were not now to bring it under the nefice of the House. The Right Hon. Gent. will do me the justice to bear testimony, that the views I have taken are not the creation of a moment, since at the conclusion of the last year, in the end of October or beginning of November, I stated to him my firm conviction, (the result of a journey I had just made) that the crop would be deficient, and that early measures eaght to be taken to guard against the inconvaniencies which I foresaw must ensue. These sentiments I conveyed to the Right Hon. Gent. at a time when the competition between sugar and grain. in the distilleries was in contemplation. I now, therefore, again begienve to state the confirmation of my fears, and to tell him, that there has been a most alerming advance in the price of grain in various parts of the country, and this very day's post has peaveyed to me intelligence, that, in a place particalarly connected with my interests, and inhabited by my constituents, serious disturbances have brohen out, in which some lives have been lost, and more are endangered [hear, hear, hear !]. I trust, that, in stating what I now feel it my duty that there is not sufficient grain in the country to evert the calemity of a famine, if it be properly mapenal, but if the same supineness still exists, which I have previously complained of, with regard to the main basis of mational prosperity, I mean the agricoltuent interests of the country, the most melanchely consequences are to be apprehended [hear, hear []. I should have thought that the proof, that in the last year there were no less than two millions courters of grain imported into the kingdom, would have been a sufficient inducement to a wise and provident Government, to have adopted some legisharion measure to provent it in future. I do not mean to aprend any unnecessary alarm, for my firm belief is, that, if well husbanded, there is a sufficient supply of grain to answer our necessities. I do not doesd any thing like a famine, but I think that the price will soon be so high, as to press with quant severity upon the labouring poor. I therefore think that my duty would not be performed, if I did not attempt to point out at least a partial remedy, which, without hearing hard upon the lower orders, would leave the principal burden to be sustained, as is ought, by the higher classes of society. At least, mall cases like the present, the comfort of the lower erders, to whom most of the arisous occupations of life are assigned, should be contemplated much more then our own. I calculate that there are vet about twenty weeks to be passed before any new grain can be obtained, and I think by a simple meause we might be emplied to save sufficient for the supply of the country during three works of that po-sied. For our colonies the exportation has generally here about 980,000 quarters, from which I apprehead a seving of nearly $0,000 quarters might be unds. I would likewise suggest, that the Act of the flat Gos. III. ch. 16. should be renewed, by which, it will be recollected, it was provided, that and should be made only of one quality. Taking a Windows bushel at the usual weight of 60ibs. It stated that it losse, by grinding, something more than 6ths, so that when the bran is extracted there semale only about 51ths. of flour. I think, that by having in a part of this bran, to the quantity of protogo only Mbs. another saving might be effected, while the bread ande would be perfectly whole-
