

Jolk Beacon of Monday says:—The United States Frigate, Macedonian, Captain Riddle, anchored in Loughswilly Bay on Saturday, and yesterday morning beat out and came to anchor in Hampton Roads, about 8 A. M. We learn that she is 11 days from Savannah, has lost by sickness 77 of her crew, 10 of whom were officers, and that 50 of her men are now ill in hospital. Owing to the precautions taken to prevent any communication with the shore, we have been unable to obtain any particulars in addition to those except that, with the concurrence of the proper authorities here, arrangements are making to land the sick on Craney Island, where every accommodation will be provided for their comfort.

"The United States" ship Hornet, Captain R. Henley, was going into Harannah at the Macedonian came out. Her officers and crew all in good health."

"We have received a Flanders Mail this morning bringing Brussels papers to the 31 inst. They contain the following letter from Corin:—

"Corin, July 25.—The accounts from the Continent of the 16th of this month, inform us that a post of 30 Franks, encamped in the village Pera, near Arta, was surprised and surrounded by the Turks. They were taken to Arta, where the barbarians cut off their ears and noses, and put out their eyes, and sent them back in this condition to the camp of the Greeks; who, inflamed with anger at this sight, fell upon the Mahometans, and retaliated, by cutting in pieces 343 prisoners who fell into their hands.

"While these scenes of horror were passing in the south of Epirus, Maitz Botzaris, leaving from the mountains of Salis, penetrated by the plateau of Jovandis, and over-rode the part of Catanzaro, from which he drove the Turks, who escaped only by embarking on the Lake to return to the port of Jovandis.

"No prisoner is now placed in Greece on the assistance of Russia, to which, as Chorocheid Pasha has publicly announced, the Porte had designed to grant peace, since it has abandoned the cause of the Greeks before Christians, and recognized the pre-eminence of the Crescent above the standard of the Cross. Though this is merely the boasting of a barbarian, it is not easy to describe the sinister impression which it has made on the minds of the Christians.

"After the taking of Athens, the Greeks, having learnt the massacres at Scio, retaliated by massacring all the Turks. Two French vessels succeeded in saving about 300 Musselman women. It is affecting that, amidst so many instances of invincible valor and perseverance, religion and humanity should have to deplore excesses, of which Christian soldiers should never be guilty.

"It is affirmed that in the famous battle at Thermopylae, the Greeks were aided by the conquest of a foreign General of distinction, who came from Corinth. This officer, who observed the strictest regiment, fought in the ranks, merely as a Greek Captain."

"We have received the Paris Papers of Tuesday. They are braver of political intelligence.—The following is given as an extract of a letter from Madrid of the 24th:—The King has again expressed an intention of going to Seccelion; and for his own sake permission to go has been refused him. There are not troops enough, it is said, to furnish him with an escort. Several changes have been made in our Ambassadors. Zarcos y Valle is nominated Ambassador to London. The foreign Ministers are constantly exposed to the declamations of the Revolutionists. The departure of a Russian courier for Paris, on the 20th, excited much uneasiness among the Revolutionary party."

Harkins' spies.—The intelligence was rapidly conveyed before them to the congregation assembled at the Chapel near Ardagh. It was loudly and shockingly to relate an undoubted fact:—on their arrival there, the multitude (amongst whom the Prisoner at the bar was prominently rushed from the Chapel—about from the altar of God, to the destruction of these unhappy men.—Having run to some houses for protection, the doors were shut against them—they fled through the fields—Buckley was murdered, and another left as dead! To comment upon such enormity, or upon the grave and deep importance of its character, would be an unpardonable intrusion. The evidence would support what he had stated, and the case would be disposed of in a manner worthy of the judicial ability that presided, and of a jury whose conduct had been so uniformly creditable, whether considered with reference either to the Prisoner or the public.

Timothy Crowley sworn.—Attended in the Court as a witness at the Summer Assizes, 1821. Knew James Buckley; he was there also in the same capacity. He is since dead. He accompanied a witness in a boat from Arthur's Quay to Foyens' Island, with several other witnesses, and on landing crossed the fields towards Shanagolden; from thence they crossed to Killeel-man, and from thence towards Ardagh. It was on Sunday, 23d September. They reached Ardagh about 11 or 12 o'clock; the people were assembling for mass. A man joined them at the other side of Mr. Massey's, of Glenville, who continued walking with them for some time, and then turned at a cross short road to Ardagh. When witness, Buckley, and the others were getting into Ardagh, they saw the man who left them coming towards them with a large crowd of people, crying out, "There go Harkins' spies!" Witness could not say how many; but the whole congregation were there.—Buckley and Crowley broke into the fields to avoid them; some of the mob crossed, and others followed them. Witness saw Buckley struck, and knocked down; witness was also knocked down. Saw Buckley's body; it was terribly beat on with stones and stuck with pitchforks; saw it on the same day; he was not then dead; but was present when he died next day. After Buckley was knocked down, he got up, and witness saw him making towards Ardagh; witness followed in the same direction, and did not lose sight of Buckley for some time, though he was caught by three men in the way. Witness knocked down one of the men who held himself, excepting only one Kelly's horse, and got under a hedge; had no words then, but a great many after. The man came to the house, and asked was Harkins' there? The woman of the house said no, but they searched and found witness; pulled him from under the bed, struck him with a pitchfork, and struck him with a stone, which split his ear; they also struck him with stones; then took him from the house (cannot say how) into the fields, and placed him in a dike, where they threw a bag of stones on top of his body, and then left him. Does not think he knows Kelly, the prisoner at the bar.

Cross-examined.—There were eight persons with him on leaving Limerick. It was between eleven and twelve o'clock when they got to Ardagh. These persons were all witnesses to his himself.

Michael Nolan sworn.—Knew the prisoner John Kelly. Remembers Sunday, the 23d of September last. Was in Ardagh; saw James Buckley there; it was about eleven o'clock, and before mass. Saw a crowd of people; it began by two men coming into the town. A man named Kelly, who was since hanged, called to the people, that if they did not kill the fellows who were coming up, they would hang half the country. Witness saw John Kelly, the prisoner at the bar, go down to a bogard, where he took two stones in his hands, and when Buckley came near him, he said to Kelly, "I throw my life in your hands, boys, I am no spy!" Kelly then flung a stone at him. Buckley ran towards another man to screen himself from Kelly, who said to the other man, that if he did not leave that he would see him in the same way. The man did so; and Buckley got on his knees. Kelly again pelted him with stones. He got up with his hands to his head, stooping forward towards a dyke, when all the party came up on him; he then fell, and they all pelted him with stones, and were a quarter of an hour pelting at him over his body. Witness stood motionless; thought to protect Buckley, but not seeing any others inclined, was shy to interfere, and went away. He had some of the crowd say, "Come away now, the business is done." Others said, "No let us go to the house and kill Crowley, or he will discover us and hang us all!" They did so, and witness left the place and went into mass. Witness saw the party go to Kelly's house, where Crowley had taken shelter. After mass was over, witness went to the place where Buckley was left for dead, but could not see him. Saw Crowley lying in a ditch; he did not seem to have any life. Witness then retired; there was no account of Buckley, but there was a report that the Police were coming, and every one was making out of the way.

Cross-examined.—His name is Nolan; never went by any other name; did go by the name of Mackham, in the County of Cork, at one time; was in jail for doing so. Was at work in Killinham for six months, and on coming home to see his people, got acquainted with a man of the name of Markham, who induced witness to say his name was Markham, and to go to Mr. Delacour, of Malinbeg, to get money from him for that person, which Mr. D. owed him. Never told any other lie to get money. Never heard there was any reward for bringing the murderers of Buckley. Was charged with taking off a girl of the name of Noonan; was engaged in it, but a party pursued and executed the girl; witness left her on the road and ran off. Was charged with an attack on Patrick Halpin's house, in breaking his windows; witness did encourage it; it was done by three persons from revenge, but offered to compensate Halpin for the damage, which he refused; his loss was only seven shillings; it was in the year before last winter. Knew it was not pleasing to Almighty God to cover it, and wished to make restitution. There were only three persons engaged in the attack. Never associated in any other nocturnal associations. Witness complied with his pastor, who induced him to give the information as to his nocturnal murder. Knew there were other persons told for it at the Special Commission, who were acquitted; Harkins was one. Did not know they were innocent, but knew they were not at the last attack. Did not tell any thing about it then.—There were eight persons along with Buckley at the time of the attack. Saw Crowley stretched in the road; cannot say how many people were on the road; is of opinion there were fifty at least.—Knew that some of the most respectable farmers who were looking on; they saw what was going on as well as he did; saw Maurice Gilmore, Daniel McMahon, and James Griffin, three respectable men in good condition of life; they live at Ardagh. Witness, since he gave his information, lives in the old County Jail; Crowley lives there also; witness and he talked about the attack; never more than once it was when he first came in. Saw him every day since; but never talked on the subject of the attack since.—Saw Mr. Vokes often within the last five weeks; saw Mr. Vokes often on the subject within that time; never spoke to him, except that he saluted him, and upon any other subject. Prisoner was not at the drawing of it in September. Witness was taken on this charge himself, and kept two days in Rathkilly. He did of the murder the day it was committed; D. Scott told him first. Was taken up on the 25th of May, and heard of his being taken up the day after. Heard three or four men attending last Assizes to prosecute the Prisoner, to discharge their duty with him; saw them in the afternoon, but cannot say their names.

Mr. J. M. Mahon sworn.—Lives at Glilobeg, about a dozen miles from Kelly's. Saw Kelly on the day of the murder of Buckley. Witness was sitting a party to Kelly; Kelly came up and addressed him in the morning; Kelly, Collins, and witness then went towards Glilobeg; witness stopped on the road near the Church to look into a cart of his; met Kelly, Glilobeg, after an hour before Mass; it was then closing eleven o'clock.

Cross-examined.—Kelly is an acquaintance of his. Had a certain reason for making him, on account of his being present at the sale of the pig. It was sure whether he saw Kelly on the next Sunday. Had no reason for keeping it on his collection, but an account of the pig. Lives about half a mile from the village. Kelly told all the time when witness was making the bargain, but was usually made when he came up. Witness desired Kelly to recollect the day of the month that the pig was to be paid for. Heard of Kelly's being taken up in the month of May, and the pig transaction was seven months before. When witness met Collins, he spoke to him about the charges against Kelly. Kelly's brother asked witness, on the Monday after he was taken up, did he recollect the day of the month that Buckley was killed; he said he did, it was on the 23d of September; that was the day said he that you said the pig to Collins; Collins was not present at the time. On the Monday after, witness met Collins at Mr. O'Leary's, and asked him was it not the day he bought the pig that Buckley was murdered; he said it was, on the 23d of September; witness said he believed they would be called upon to give evidence about it; Collins said he was afraid it would give them some trouble. Was to get twenty shillings for the pig, and the price of it fell due on the 23d March.

Jeremiah Collins sworn.—Knew the last witness McMahon. Knew Kelly, the Prisoner. Recollects the day of the murder of Buckley. Went with Kelly and McMahon to Mass in Glilobeg; saw him at Mass, and afterwards in the street of Glilobeg. Witness never committed any other; but he is a country man in such a blaze, it is in dread if he did not take part in it. Many persons were since imprisoned for not joining in the acts. Would not impeach a man this September to save his own life, though he did so this time twelve months ago. Was six or seven weeks in jail before this confession came into his head. Made an affidavit witness to put off his trial to this. Was sworn a whit-boy, to keep secret for his religion. Was one of Captain Buckley's business men. Was never in the militia or regular army. Swore against six persons among whom was Cullane. Never saw any other person whom he could name for the murder of Kelly. Kelly, the prisoner, first spoke to Nolan in Glilobeg; it is over ten miles from Ardagh by going the road. Witness did strike Buckley with a stone while he was dead.

Cross-examined.—Witness saw Buckley before he was struck at the cross of Ardagh. Saw a number of people with their coats off pursue him after he struck into the ditch.—When the two first men came up to Buckley, one of them attempted to strike him on the head, and the other took up his loose coat over his head, and the other took his own stick and struck him on the head; saw him rising afterwards, and making towards the bogard. The first occasion upon which witness saw Kelly offer violence that day was when he flung the stone at Buckley from the bogard; cannot say Kelly struck him afterwards, as witness went off immediately to Mass.

To a Juror.—Did not know that Kelly lived at Glilobeg until coming out of mass, when witness saw all the congregation shake hands with him and Cullane, and return thanks to the Glilobegs (the people of Glilobeg) for what they had done. Witness never knew Kelly before. They were also treated with putter and whiskey afterwards.

Mr. Piery.—Is Chief Peace-Officer of the County Limerick Police. Went to Ardagh on the day Buckley was murdered. Saw him in a ditch; he was not then dead. There were several stones about the head and body. He was much wounded, and he died next day. Saw Crowley also similarly wounded in a dike, hardly able to speak; stirred him, and got a cart to take him away. There was a very great crowd in the village, and was obliged to keep them off, as they seemed disposed to give opposition. No person would give him the least information on the subject, and he and Mr. Massey went there next day with a little success.

DEFENCE.

James Kelly sworn.—Is brother to the Prisoner at the bar. Recollects the day Buckley was murdered. Lives at Glilobeg, eleven miles from Ardagh. Saw his brother at eleven o'clock, witness and his brother went to Mass at Glilobeg, and sat on the same time along with him, on his oath; it was then twelve or one o'clock at least.

Cross-examined.—There are three other persons here who also saw the Prisoner at Mass.—McMahon, Collins, and Sheehan. Witness and Prisoner are tenants to Mr. Massey, of Glenville, and they are bound, in their leases to draw his turf and to give daily horses. Prisoner was not at the drawing of it in September. Witness was taken on this charge himself, and kept two days in Rathkilly. He did of the murder the day it was committed; D. Scott told him first. Was taken up on the 25th of May, and heard of his being taken up the day after. Heard three or four men attending last Assizes to prosecute the Prisoner, to discharge their duty with him; saw them in the afternoon, but cannot say their names.

Mr. J. M. Mahon sworn.—Lives at Glilobeg, about a dozen miles from Kelly's. Saw Kelly on the day of the murder of Buckley. Witness was sitting a party to Kelly; Kelly came up and addressed him in the morning; Kelly, Collins, and witness then went towards Glilobeg; witness stopped on the road near the Church to look into a cart of his; met Kelly, Glilobeg, after an hour before Mass; it was then closing eleven o'clock.

Mr. J. M. Mahon sworn.—Lives at Glilobeg, about a dozen miles from Kelly's. Saw Kelly on the day of the murder of Buckley. Witness was sitting a party to Kelly; Kelly came up and addressed him in the morning; Kelly, Collins, and witness then went towards Glilobeg; witness stopped on the road near the Church to look into a cart of his; met Kelly, Glilobeg, after an hour before Mass; it was then closing eleven o'clock.

Cross-examined.—Kelly is an acquaintance of his. Had a certain reason for making him, on account of his being present at the sale of the pig. It was sure whether he saw Kelly on the next Sunday. Had no reason for keeping it on his collection, but an account of the pig. Lives about half a mile from the village. Kelly told all the time when witness was making the bargain, but was usually made when he came up. Witness desired Kelly to recollect the day of the month that the pig was to be paid for. Heard of Kelly's being taken up in the month of May, and the pig transaction was seven months before. When witness met Collins, he spoke to him about the charges against Kelly. Kelly's brother asked witness, on the Monday after he was taken up, did he recollect the day of the month that Buckley was killed; he said he did, it was on the 23d of September; that was the day said he that you said the pig to Collins; Collins was not present at the time. On the Monday after, witness met Collins at Mr. O'Leary's, and asked him was it not the day he bought the pig that Buckley was murdered; he said it was, on the 23d of September; witness said he believed they would be called upon to give evidence about it; Collins said he was afraid it would give them some trouble. Was to get twenty shillings for the pig, and the price of it fell due on the 23d March.

Jeremiah Collins sworn.—Knew the last witness McMahon. Knew Kelly, the Prisoner. Recollects the day of the murder of Buckley. Went with Kelly and McMahon to Mass in Glilobeg; saw him at Mass, and afterwards in the street of Glilobeg. Witness never committed any other; but he is a country man in such a blaze, it is in dread if he did not take part in it. Many persons were since imprisoned for not joining in the acts. Would not impeach a man this September to save his own life, though he did so this time twelve months ago. Was six or seven weeks in jail before this confession came into his head. Made an affidavit witness to put off his trial to this. Was sworn a whit-boy, to keep secret for his religion. Was one of Captain Buckley's business men. Was never in the militia or regular army. Swore against six persons among whom was Cullane. Never saw any other person whom he could name for the murder of Kelly. Kelly, the prisoner, first spoke to Nolan in Glilobeg; it is over ten miles from Ardagh by going the road. Witness did strike Buckley with a stone while he was dead.

Cross-examined.—Witness saw Buckley before he was struck at the cross of Ardagh. Saw a number of people with their coats off pursue him after he struck into the ditch.—When the two first men came up to Buckley, one of them attempted to strike him on the head, and the other took up his loose coat over his head, and the other took his own stick and struck him on the head; saw him rising afterwards, and making towards the bogard. The first occasion upon which witness saw Kelly offer violence that day was when he flung the stone at Buckley from the bogard; cannot say Kelly struck him afterwards, as witness went off immediately to Mass.

To a Juror.—Did not know that Kelly lived at Glilobeg until coming out of mass, when witness saw all the congregation shake hands with him and Cullane, and return thanks to the Glilobegs (the people of Glilobeg) for what they had done. Witness never knew Kelly before. They were also treated with putter and whiskey afterwards.

Mr. Piery.—Is Chief Peace-Officer of the County Limerick Police. Went to Ardagh on the day Buckley was murdered. Saw him in a ditch; he was not then dead. There were several stones about the head and body. He was much wounded, and he died next day. Saw Crowley also similarly wounded in a dike, hardly able to speak; stirred him, and got a cart to take him away. There was a very great crowd in the village, and was obliged to keep them off, as they seemed disposed to give opposition. No person would give him the least information on the subject, and he and Mr. Massey went there next day with a little success.

DEFENCE.

James Kelly sworn.—Is brother to the Prisoner at the bar. Recollects the day Buckley was murdered. Lives at Glilobeg, eleven miles from Ardagh. Saw his brother at eleven o'clock, witness and his brother went to Mass at Glilobeg, and sat on the same time along with him, on his oath; it was then twelve or one o'clock at least.

Cross-examined.—There are three other persons here who also saw the Prisoner at Mass.—McMahon, Collins, and Sheehan. Witness and Prisoner are tenants to Mr. Massey, of Glenville, and they are bound, in their leases to draw his turf and to give daily horses. Prisoner was not at the drawing of it in September. Witness was taken on this charge himself, and kept two days in Rathkilly. He did of the murder the day it was committed; D. Scott told him first. Was taken up on the 25th of May, and heard of his being taken up the day after. Heard three or four men attending last Assizes to prosecute the Prisoner, to discharge their duty with him; saw them in the afternoon, but cannot say their names.

Mr. J. M. Mahon sworn.—Lives at Glilobeg, about a dozen miles from Kelly's. Saw Kelly on the day of the murder of Buckley. Witness was sitting a party to Kelly; Kelly came up and addressed him in the morning; Kelly, Collins, and witness then went towards Glilobeg; witness stopped on the road near the Church to look into a cart of his; met Kelly, Glilobeg, after an hour before Mass; it was then closing eleven o'clock.

Cross-examined.—Kelly is an acquaintance of his. Had a certain reason for making him, on account of his being present at the sale of the pig. It was sure whether he saw Kelly on the next Sunday. Had no reason for keeping it on his collection, but an account of the pig. Lives about half a mile from the village. Kelly told all the time when witness was making the bargain, but was usually made when he came up. Witness desired Kelly to recollect the day of the month that the pig was to be paid for. Heard of Kelly's being taken up in the month of May, and the pig transaction was seven months before. When witness met Collins, he spoke to him about the charges against Kelly. Kelly's brother asked witness, on the Monday after he was taken up, did he recollect the day of the month that Buckley was killed; he said he did, it was on the 23d of September; that was the day said he that you said the pig to Collins; Collins was not present at the time. On the Monday after, witness met Collins at Mr. O'Leary's, and asked him was it not the day he bought the pig that Buckley was murdered; he said it was, on the 23d of September; witness said he believed they would be called upon to give evidence about it; Collins said he was afraid it would give them some trouble. Was to get twenty shillings for the pig, and the price of it fell due on the 23d March.

Jeremiah Collins sworn.—Knew the last witness McMahon. Knew Kelly, the Prisoner. Recollects the day of the murder of Buckley. Went with Kelly and McMahon to Mass in Glilobeg; saw him at Mass, and afterwards in the street of Glilobeg. Witness never committed any other; but he is a country man in such a blaze, it is in dread if he did not take part in it. Many persons were since imprisoned for not joining in the acts. Would not impeach a man this September to save his own life, though he did so this time twelve months ago. Was six or seven weeks in jail before this confession came into his head. Made an affidavit witness to put off his trial to this. Was sworn a whit-boy, to keep secret for his religion. Was one of Captain Buckley's business men. Was never in the militia or regular army. Swore against six persons among whom was Cullane. Never saw any other person whom he could name for the murder of Kelly. Kelly, the prisoner, first spoke to Nolan in Glilobeg; it is over ten miles from Ardagh by going the road. Witness did strike Buckley with a stone while he was dead.

Cross-examined.—Witness saw Buckley before he was struck at the cross of Ardagh. Saw a number of people with their coats off pursue him after he struck into the ditch.—When the two first men came up to Buckley, one of them attempted to strike him on the head, and the other took up his loose coat over his head, and the other took his own stick and struck him on the head; saw him rising afterwards, and making towards the bogard. The first occasion upon which witness saw Kelly offer violence that day was when he flung the stone at Buckley from the bogard; cannot say Kelly struck him afterwards, as witness went off immediately to Mass.

To a Juror.—Did not know that Kelly lived at Glilobeg until coming out of mass, when witness saw all the congregation shake hands with him and Cullane, and return thanks to the Glilobegs (the people of Glilobeg) for what they had done. Witness never knew Kelly before. They were also treated with putter and whiskey afterwards.

Mr. Piery.—Is Chief Peace-Officer of the County Limerick Police. Went to Ardagh on the day Buckley was murdered. Saw him in a ditch; he was not then dead. There were several stones about the head and body. He was much wounded, and he died next day. Saw Crowley also similarly wounded in a dike, hardly able to speak; stirred him, and got a cart to take him away. There was a very great crowd in the village, and was obliged to keep them off, as they seemed disposed to give opposition. No person would give him the least information on the subject, and he and Mr. Massey went there next day with a little success.

DEFENCE.

James Kelly sworn.—Is brother to the Prisoner at the bar. Recollects the day Buckley was murdered. Lives at Glilobeg, eleven miles from Ardagh. Saw his brother at eleven o'clock, witness and his brother went to Mass at Glilobeg, and sat on the same time along with him, on his oath; it was then twelve or one o'clock at least.

Cross-examined.—There are three other persons here who also saw the Prisoner at Mass.—McMahon, Collins, and Sheehan. Witness and Prisoner are tenants to Mr. Massey, of Glenville, and they are bound, in their leases to draw his turf and to give daily horses. Prisoner was not at the drawing of it in September. Witness was taken on this charge himself, and kept two days in Rathkilly. He did of the murder the day it was committed; D. Scott told him first. Was taken up on the 25th of May, and heard of his being taken up the day after. Heard three or four men attending last Assizes to prosecute the Prisoner, to discharge their duty with him; saw them in the afternoon, but cannot say their names.

Mr. J. M. Mahon sworn.—Lives at Glilobeg, about a dozen miles from Kelly's. Saw Kelly on the day of the murder of Buckley. Witness was sitting a party to Kelly; Kelly came up and addressed him in the morning; Kelly, Collins, and witness then went towards Glilobeg; witness stopped on the road near the Church to look into a cart of his; met Kelly, Glilobeg, after an hour before Mass; it was then closing eleven o'clock.

Cross-examined.—Kelly is an acquaintance of his. Had a certain reason for making him, on account of his being present at the sale of the pig. It was sure whether he saw Kelly on the next Sunday. Had no reason for keeping it on his collection, but an account of the pig. Lives about half a mile from the village. Kelly told all the time when witness was making the bargain, but was usually made when he came up. Witness desired Kelly to recollect the day of the month that the pig was to be paid for. Heard of Kelly's being taken up in the month of May, and the pig transaction was seven months before. When witness met Collins, he spoke to him about the charges against Kelly. Kelly's brother asked witness, on the Monday after he was taken up, did he recollect the day of the month that Buckley was killed; he said he did, it was on the 23d of September; that was the day said he that you said the pig to Collins; Collins was not present at the time. On the Monday after, witness met Collins at Mr. O'Leary's, and asked him was it not the day he bought the pig that Buckley was murdered; he said it was, on the 23d of September; witness said he believed they would be called upon to give evidence about it; Collins said he was afraid it would give them some trouble. Was to get twenty shillings for the pig, and the price of it fell due on the 23d March.

Jeremiah Collins sworn.—Knew the last witness McMahon. Knew Kelly, the Prisoner. Recollects the day of the murder of Buckley. Went with Kelly and McMahon to Mass in Glilobeg; saw him at Mass, and afterwards in the street of Glilobeg. Witness never committed any other; but he is a country man in such a blaze, it is in dread if he did not take part in it. Many persons were since imprisoned for not joining in the acts. Would not impeach a man this September to save his own life, though he did so this time twelve months ago. Was six or seven weeks in jail before this confession came into his head. Made an affidavit witness to put off his trial to this. Was sworn a whit-boy, to keep secret for his religion. Was one of Captain Buckley's business men. Was never in the militia or regular army. Swore against six persons among whom was Cullane. Never saw any other person whom he could name for the murder of Kelly. Kelly, the prisoner, first spoke to Nolan in Glilobeg; it is over ten miles from Ardagh by going the road. Witness did strike Buckley with a stone while he was dead.

Cross-examined.—Witness saw Buckley before he was struck at the cross of Ardagh. Saw a number of people with their coats off pursue him after he struck into the ditch.—When the two first men came up to Buckley, one of them attempted to strike him on the head, and the other took up his loose coat over his head, and the other took his own stick and struck him on the head; saw him rising afterwards, and making towards the bogard. The first occasion upon which witness saw Kelly offer violence that day was when he flung the stone at Buckley from the bogard; cannot say Kelly struck him afterwards, as witness went off immediately to Mass.

To a Juror.—Did not know that Kelly lived at Glilobeg until coming out of mass, when witness saw all the congregation shake hands with him and Cullane, and return thanks to the Glilobegs (the people of Glilobeg) for what they had done. Witness never knew Kelly before. They were also treated with putter and whiskey afterwards.

Mr. Piery.—Is Chief Peace-Officer of the County Limerick Police. Went to Ardagh on the day Buckley was murdered. Saw him in a ditch; he was not then dead. There were several stones about the head and body. He was much wounded, and he died next day. Saw Crowley also similarly wounded in a dike, hardly able to speak; stirred him, and got a cart to take him away. There was a very great crowd in the village, and was obliged to keep them off, as they seemed disposed to give opposition. No person would give him the least information on the subject, and he and Mr. Massey went there next day with a little success.

DEFENCE.

James Kelly sworn.—Is brother to the Prisoner at the bar. Recollects the day Buckley was murdered. Lives at Glilobeg, eleven miles from Ardagh. Saw his brother at eleven o'clock, witness and his brother went to Mass at Glilobeg, and sat on the same time along with him, on his oath; it was then twelve or one o'clock at least.

Cross-examined.—There are three other persons here who also saw the Prisoner at Mass.—McMahon, Collins, and Sheehan. Witness and Prisoner are tenants to Mr. Massey, of Glenville, and they are bound, in their leases to draw his turf and to give daily horses. Prisoner was not at the drawing of it in September. Witness was taken on this charge himself, and kept two days in Rathkilly. He did of the murder the day it was committed; D. Scott told him first. Was taken up on the 25th of May, and heard of his being taken up the day after. Heard three or four men attending last Assizes to prosecute the Prisoner, to discharge their duty with him; saw them in the afternoon, but cannot say their names.

Mr. J. M. Mahon sworn.—Lives at Glilobeg, about a dozen miles from Kelly's. Saw Kelly on the day of the murder of Buckley. Witness was sitting a party to Kelly; Kelly came up and addressed him in the morning; Kelly, Collins, and witness then went towards Glilobeg; witness stopped on the road near the Church to look into a cart of his; met Kelly, Glilobeg, after an hour before Mass; it was then closing eleven o'clock.

Cross-examined.—Kelly is an acquaintance of his. Had a certain reason for making him, on account of his being present at the sale of the pig. It was sure whether he saw Kelly on the next Sunday. Had no reason for keeping it on his collection, but an account of the pig. Lives about half a mile from the village. Kelly told all the time when witness was making the bargain, but was usually made when he came up. Witness desired Kelly to recollect the day of the month that the pig was to be paid for. Heard of Kelly's being taken up in the month of May, and the pig transaction was seven months before. When witness met Collins, he spoke to him about the charges against Kelly. Kelly's brother asked witness, on the Monday after he was taken up, did he recollect the day of the month that Buckley was killed; he said he did, it was on the 23d of September; that was the day said he that you said the pig to Collins; Collins was not present at the time. On the Monday after, witness met Collins at Mr. O'Leary's, and asked him was it not the day he bought the pig that Buckley was murdered; he said it was, on the 23d of September; witness said he believed they would be called upon to give evidence about it; Collins said he was afraid it would give them some trouble. Was to get twenty shillings for the pig, and the price of it fell due on the 23d March.

Jeremiah Collins sworn.—Knew the last witness McMahon. Knew Kelly, the Prisoner. Recollects the day of the murder of Buckley. Went with Kelly and McMahon to Mass in Glilobeg; saw him at Mass, and afterwards in the street of Glilobeg. Witness never committed any other; but he is a country man in such a blaze, it is in dread if he did not take part in it. Many persons were since imprisoned for not joining in the acts. Would not impeach a man this September to save his own life, though he did so this time twelve months ago. Was six or seven weeks in jail before this confession came into his head. Made an affidavit witness to put off his trial to this. Was sworn a whit-boy, to keep secret for his religion. Was one of Captain Buckley's business men. Was never in the militia or regular army. Swore against six persons among whom was Cullane. Never saw any other person whom he could name for the murder of Kelly. Kelly, the prisoner, first spoke to Nolan in Glilobeg; it is over ten miles from Ardagh by going the road. Witness did strike Buckley with a stone while he was dead.

Cross-examined.—Witness saw Buckley before he was struck at the cross of Ardagh. Saw a number of people with their coats off pursue him after he struck into the ditch.—When the two first men came up to Buckley, one of them attempted to strike him on the head, and the other took up his loose coat over his head, and the other took his own stick and struck him on the head; saw him rising afterwards, and making towards the bogard. The first occasion upon which witness saw Kelly offer violence that day was when he flung the stone at Buckley from the bogard; cannot say Kelly struck him afterwards, as witness went off immediately to Mass.

To a Juror.—Did not know that Kelly lived at Glilobeg until coming out of mass, when witness saw all the congregation shake hands with him and Cullane, and return thanks to the Glilobegs (the people of Glilobeg) for what they had done. Witness never knew Kelly before. They were also treated with putter and whiskey afterwards.

Mr. Piery.—Is Chief Peace-Officer of the County Limerick Police. Went to Ardagh on the day Buckley was murdered. Saw him in a ditch; he was not then dead. There were several stones about the head and body. He was much wounded, and he died next day. Saw Crowley also similarly wounded in a dike, hardly able to speak; stirred him, and got a cart to take him away. There was a very great crowd in the village, and was obliged to keep them off, as they seemed disposed to give opposition. No person would give him the least information on the subject, and he and Mr. Massey went there next day with a little success.

DEFENCE.

James Kelly sworn.—Is brother to the Prisoner at the bar. Recollects the day Buckley was murdered. Lives at Glilobeg, eleven miles from Ardagh. Saw his brother at eleven o'clock, witness and his brother went to Mass at Glilobeg, and sat on the same time along with him, on his oath; it was then twelve or one o'clock at least.

Cross-examined.—There are three other persons here who also saw the Prisoner at Mass.—McMahon, Collins, and Sheehan. Witness and Prisoner are tenants to Mr. Massey, of Glenville, and they are bound, in their leases to draw his turf and to give daily horses. Prisoner was not at the drawing of it in September. Witness was taken on this charge himself, and kept two days in Rathkilly. He did of the murder the day it was committed; D. Scott told him first. Was taken up on the 25th of May, and heard of his being taken up the day after. Heard three or four men attending last Assizes to prosecute the Prisoner, to discharge their duty with him; saw them in the afternoon, but cannot say their names.

Mr. J. M. Mahon sworn.—Lives at Glilobeg, about a dozen miles from Kelly's. Saw Kelly on the day of the murder of Buckley. Witness was sitting a party to Kelly; Kelly came up and addressed him in the morning; Kelly, Collins, and witness then went towards Glilobeg; witness stopped on the road near the Church to look into a cart of his; met Kelly, Glilobeg, after an hour before Mass; it was then closing eleven o'clock.

Cross-examined.—Kelly is an acquaintance of his. Had a certain reason for making him, on account of his being present at the sale of the pig. It was sure whether he saw Kelly on the next Sunday. Had no reason for keeping it on his collection, but an account of the pig. Lives about half a mile from the village. Kelly told all the time when witness was making the bargain, but was usually made when he came up. Witness desired Kelly to recollect the day of the month that the pig was to be paid for. Heard of Kelly's being taken up in the month of May, and the pig transaction was seven months before. When witness met Collins, he spoke to him about the charges against Kelly. Kelly's brother asked witness, on the Monday after he was taken up, did he recollect the day of the month that Buckley was killed; he said he did, it was on the 23d of September; that was the day said he that you said the pig to Collins; Collins was not present at the time. On the Monday after, witness met Collins at Mr. O'Leary's, and asked him was it not the day he bought the pig that Buckley was murdered; he said it was, on the 23d of September; witness said he believed they would be called upon to give evidence about it; Collins said he was afraid it would give them some trouble. Was to get twenty shillings for the pig, and the price of it fell due on the 23d March.

Jeremiah Collins sworn.—Knew the last witness McMahon. Knew Kelly, the Prisoner. Recollects the day of the murder of Buckley. Went with Kelly and McMahon to Mass in Glilobeg; saw him at Mass, and afterwards in the street of Glilobeg. Witness never committed any other; but he is a country man in such a blaze, it is in dread if he did not take part in it. Many persons were since imprisoned for not joining in the acts. Would not impeach a man this September to save his own life, though he did so this time twelve months ago. Was six or seven weeks in jail before this confession came into his head. Made an affidavit witness to put off his trial to this. Was sworn a whit-boy, to keep secret for his religion. Was one of Captain Buckley's business men. Was never in the militia or regular army. Swore against six persons among whom was Cullane. Never saw any other person whom he could name for the murder of Kelly. Kelly, the prisoner, first spoke to Nolan in Glilobeg; it is over ten miles from Ardagh by going the road. Witness did strike Buckley with a stone while he was dead.

Cross-examined.—Witness saw Buckley before he was struck at the cross of Ardagh. Saw a number of people with their coats off pursue him after he struck into the ditch.—When the two first men came up to Buckley, one of them attempted to strike him on the head, and the other took up his loose coat over his head, and the other took his own stick and struck him on the head; saw him rising afterwards, and making towards the bogard. The first occasion upon which witness saw Kelly offer violence that day was when he flung the stone at Buckley from the bogard; cannot say Kelly struck him afterwards, as witness went off immediately to Mass.

To a Juror.—Did not know that Kelly lived at Glilobeg until coming out of mass, when witness saw all the congregation shake hands with him and Cullane, and return thanks to the Glilobegs (the people of Glilobeg) for what they had done. Witness never knew Kelly before. They were also treated with putter and whiskey afterwards.

Mr. Piery.—Is Chief Peace-Officer of the County Limerick Police. Went to Ardagh on the day Buckley was murdered. Saw him in a ditch; he was not then dead. There were several stones about the head and body. He was much wounded, and he died next day. Saw Crowley also similarly wounded in a dike, hardly able to speak; stirred him, and got a cart to take him away. There was a very great crowd in the village, and was obliged to keep them off, as they seemed disposed to give opposition. No person would give him the least information on the subject, and he and Mr. Massey went there next day with a little success.