

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14.

The Lord Chancellor observed that he had read all the additional affidavits that had been filed, and it appeared to him that there had not been sufficient medical inquiry into the state of the Noble Earl's mind: at all events, there had not been enough done, as it related to that point, to be satisfactory to him (his Lordship), or that he would be justified in coming to a conclusion of the sanity or insanity of the Noble Earl. Therefore, before he again heard Counsel, he would direct a further medical examination of the supposed lunatic, for which purpose he would send down to the country his own family physician, either party to be at liberty to appoint another Gentleman to meet him there, which would make it necessary that the further hearing of the case should be postponed to Tuesday or Wednesday next.

POLICY OF GREAT BRITAIN, THE LATE ALARM, &c.

(From the COURIER of Tuesday.) The situation in the public mind, (to which the rumors daily arising from the Continent give rise) and especially the effects produced in the money market, render it at least an interesting speculation, to consider what line of policy wisdom points out to Great Britain, in her existing state, both as it regards her internally, and in her relations with Foreign Powers. Were we to draw the broad line which her importance in the scale of Europe, her insular and colonial position, and the remembrance of her glorious share in the grand struggle of the last thirty years, for the liberties of the world, dictate, we should say, that it is her duty not to engage in any views of any other Governments which do not of necessity involve her national interests. Bound by the faith of treaties, which can never be violated, it does appear to us, that, so long as the affairs of other countries are confined within their respective bounds, interference on our parts would not only be uncalled for, but unjustifiable. Great Britain stands alone in the world for this sublime pre-eminence; that through the struggles of past ages, she has inherited the inestimable blessing of a free Constitution, combining every object of practical utility, and the protection of person and property with the widest scope of popular liberty. As she values this pre-eminence, it becomes her to pursue a pure and dignified course wherever a People aim at the attainment of similar happiness. When England stood in the front of battle against Bonaparte, she was belied by those who called her the ally of tyrants. It was in the abhorrence of tyranny, and to save the universe from despotism, that she rushed into the ranks, having herself comparatively little to fear, from the madness of the spreading contagion. The same principle applies to her now, and with the added force of the consideration that she is safer, and more heart-sound at home, than during the fever of the terrible now experiment of the French Revolution. To be the mediocrity, and ultimately the empire, of Europe, is at once her natural and proud station. Whatever may happen in the internal concerns of other countries, her system is neutrality, unless the means employed by either party are such as to threaten her own tranquillity and weal. We should, by implication, libel our own political existence—our enjoyment of rational freedom—our limited monarchical form—our fair and equal representation of the People, and all our constitutional establishments, approaching as they do so nearly to human perfection, were we to abandon the height on which these place us, to mix in alien struggles; and, above all, to oppose the acquisition of like ennobling institutions elsewhere. Such a departure, however, from the character of England, is not to be feared from the Administration which at this momentous period wields her destinies.

(From the MORNING CHRONICLE of Wednesday.) The panic had not subsided yesterday, though confidence began to revive towards the close of the market. Spanish Bonds recovered very slightly from their depressed state. It was remarked, however, that those who had been excited on Saturday were yesterday buyers on a large scale.

We consider the whole affair to have been a Stock-jobbing speculation, extremely well got up, no doubt, and attended with great success; made in the confident expectation of an immense eventual gain. We do not envy either the feelings or the profits of those who are in the secret. But the scheme has been the cause of extensive ruin and distress. We understand, indeed, that no fewer than four defrauders have been already announced.

The scheme was certainly extensively and deeply laid, but still we are astonished at its unparalleled success, and the want of discernment in those who, at the expense of their fortunes, have given credit to the most vague reports, emanating, too, from a suspicious quarter. The basis of the scheme had no connection whatever with the Congress of Verona. As alarm was spread at the Pavilion Mariani, when information was received there that the two Infantes of Spain were cited before a tribunal, as witnesses against the late Ministers, accused of being parties to a conspiracy against the liberties of their Country, the chief theatre of which had been the palace of their own well, were inmates. How far they were personally implicated is no doubt much better known at the Pavilion Mariani than possibly could be in Madrid; but in the terror of the moment, the Ultra leaders obtained from the King, in answer to their remonstrances, a hasty assurance that he would not allow any more Bourbon blood to be spilled, for which there was certainly no ground of apprehension, nor was the idea entertained beyond the portals of the Tuilleries. This was instantly interpreted into a declaration of war, and we regret to say, our own countrymen have been the chief dupes on this occasion.

(From the COURIER of Wednesday.) Our readers have seen, through our Paper, the manner in which the public mind, in the two great capitals of Europe, has been agitated, by all sorts of sinister rumours. These we noticed, in order to account for the great depression in the Funds of both countries. At the same time we announced, that no intelligence had been received by Government in confirmation of them—in fact, that they were believed to be wholly unfounded. We have since been enabled to ascertain that they are equally groundless. These assurances have renewed the panic that existed to a degree which has not often been supposed. We trust that, during the sitting of the Congress, we shall be able, from time to time, to state whether the rumours (that will, no doubt, be circulated in profusion) are or are not well founded. Indeed the manner in which public credulity has been practised upon within the last five or six days, has sufficiently shown the necessity of this. The evil has been most felt in those quarters where only the proper remedy can be applied; and it is by no means improbable that the Powers assembled in Congress will deem it necessary, even in the commencement of their labours, to issue some Manifesto, or publish some Declaration, calculated to tranquillize the public mind throughout Europe, and thus to defeat, in the outset, the manoeuvres of those whose only object is to gratify their own cupidity, at any risk, and by any means.

We have now to notice some of the rumours that have been in circulation. One was, that the Emperor of Russia had procured from the Congress a recommendation of an immediate war with the Porte. Had there been any foundation (which there is not) for the report of war between these two Powers, it is certain that the Emperor would not have applied to the Congress for any such recommendation.

Another report was, that further changes had been determined upon with respect to Italy, by which the political situation of that Country would be materially changed. As little foundation is there to this rumour.

A third report insisted that the German Confederation was to be greatly disturbed, and that some of the smaller Powers would be merged in the larger. This is equally untrue.

But all these rumours were subordinate to those relative to Spain. It was asserted that all the Powers intended to dictate a Constitution to Spain, at the point of the sword—that France had been actually declared, and that that which had entered Spain, at the express desire and concurrence of Russia, Austria, and Prussia. Now it is certain, that too much stress has been laid upon the supposed sentiments of those three Powers, with respect to Spain. They have no very direct or personal interest with respect to Spain; they have, indeed, a general interest and desire, which are common to all other Powers, that Spain should be in such a state of internal peace, as to make her discharge her relative duties to all other Powers, but their policy does not dictate to them to apply their blood and treasures for the purpose of accomplishing any such project.

France, indeed, has a much more immediate interest in the affairs of Spain, because she is in immediate contact with her; she has the armies for any armed intervention on her part have not occurred, and probably may not occur. She is not likely to interfere, with the view of prescribing any particular Constitution to the Spanish People, however she may be convinced, that the present one is by no means calculated to insure their happiness, prosperity, or freedom. But since will, of course, adopt that policy of which Spain herself sets the example at the commencement of the French Revolution. She will interfere, if the safety of the King of Spain, or of the Royal Family, be brought into peril; and of this, we believe, the Spanish Government is sufficiently conscious. Besides, it must not be forgotten, that affairs have lately taken a turn in that Country, which may render any foreign interference less necessary, even if any such interference had been previously in contemplation.

As to Great Britain, her path has already been broadly marked out. It is clear and explicit. She will, as we have more than once announced, preserve the strictest neutrality.

LONDON.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 13. The Paris Papers of Sunday and Monday have arrived. The Courier Francaise mentions a report of a partial change of Ministry, by the resignation of three of the most moderate Members of the Cabinet, who are to be succeeded by three of the most violent of the Ultra party. A division of the Army of the Faith, under D'Errolles, was defeated by Mina with considerable loss, on the 26th, at Toru, near Castellon, after which Mina advanced in the direction of Belaguer.—The defeat of Quenda by General Espinosa is also confirmed. It took place on the 27th at Los Arcos. Quenda's troops having been put to flight, he escaped to Bayona, where he paid his first visit to the house of Anticham, the French General. This is the principal intelligence contained in the Paris Papers. The reported change in the French Ministry would afford, but it does not appear to be supported by any account of the success of the Constitutional army, which most operate to the discouragement of such an enterprise. The total discomfiture of the Army of the Faith on its own ground, supported by the army of the proximity of its French friends, promises the most complete success to the constitutional cause.

The Journal de Paris, of Monday, communicates the following intelligence from Madrid:—MADRID, Oct. 28.—The municipality of Madrid has just decreed the creation of a new corps of National Guard, which will be composed of boys from the age of ten to that of seventeen years, who, however, will be admitted upon the consent of their parents. This measure has for its object, to familiarize youth, from their infancy, with constitutional ideas.

"During several days past, an extraordinary activity has been remarked in the War Department, and orders have been given for the completion of numerous articles which the artillery are in need of, as well as for purchases of horses, supply of clothing, &c.

"Very extensive movements continue to be made amongst our troops; all, or nearly all, the provincial militia are on foot, and march, as well as the troops of the line, towards the French frontiers; these only remain in the interior what is indispensable for the maintenance of public tranquillity, and even the garrisons of the fortresses are reduced to their minimum.

(Extract of a Private Letter.) "Yesterday, Lieutenant-General the Prince of Santo-Mauro was put into prison. During the first week of July, this personage did not quit the Palace: according to information obtained by preliminary investigation, it is affirmed that he was nominated Captain or Commandant-General of the entire division of the Royal Guard, in case the project of destroying the Constitutional system should succeed.

"The Marquis de Gara Sarria has fled to Gibraltar; orders had already been given for his arrest. The Duke de Linares has also escaped from Corunna, and has embarked for England.

"The Cortes yesterday granted Government the sums it had required for the augmentation of the army. Immediately afterwards, extraordinary couriers were despatched to the provinces with the necessary orders and instructions to hasten all the preparations of this great operation, so that it might be ready in the lapse of 3 months, we shall be able to place on foot an army of 60,000 men.

"Our paper-money feels the effect of the rise of our credit in foreign markets. The value has experienced a rise."

"We have received these Humberg Mails this morning, bringing Papers to the 10th instant. An article from Frankfurt says, that the report of the intention of the King of Naples to lay down his Crown, and to return into the Austrian dominions, is confirmed. There is no mention, however, of the mode in which the confirmation has taken place.

"An article from Vienna, it is said, that the Emperor of Russia has invited Prince Alexander, de Hohenlohe, to go to St. Petersburg, in company with another Catholic Prince, as soon as his Majesty returns to his capital. It is said his Majesty has spoken in very favourable terms of the Catholic Church in Russia, and that he intends to pay a visit to the Pope.

"Several English soldiers, who have been circulating false bills of exchange, have been arrested at Berlin just as they were going to set off with post-horses. They had already obtained large sums from mercantile houses there, and had passed papers signed by the English Ambassador; and false papers being found on them, they were conducted to prison.

"We are sorry to announce the sudden death of James Weddell, Esq. by Major's Society-General for Scotland, on Thursday night, at St. Mary's Isle, Kirkcaldy, while on a visit to his sister, the Countess of Sutherland.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 14. The Intention is to receive by our Government from Verona, so to be 5th instant.—At that time the discussions were still going on. It is understood that nothing had been definitively settled.—Cont.

Accounts have been received from Rio Janeiro, stating that the Prince, the Authorities, and inhabitants of Rio de Janeiro, have, in the name of the Brazilian nation, declared its absolute independence, and finally renounced all allegiance to the Parent State. The Portuguese Government, profiting by the example of Spain in her vain attempts to recover her dominion in South America, will, we hope, be induced to call home her troops, so much wanted in the present critical state of the Peninsula.

We have received this morning Philadelphia Papers to the 20th ult., from which we extract the following intelligence respecting South America.—It is, doubtless, to be regretted, that the remnant of Spanish troops in Colombia should have obtained a useless triumph; for, unless it must prove, and can only end in suggesting an unnecessary every soldier in the Peninsula, and furnish them with all the requisite means of war, they would be unable now to ward from the Colonians the liberty they have gained.

COLUMBIA REPUBLIC.—Captain Buckley, arrested from Laguna, states, that the day before he received information was received of the capture of Maracibo, by General Morales, without opposition. General Paez, with 3000 men, had stretched some days previous for Maracibo, and General Sublette was to leave Caracas next day for the same place, with the like number. He did not get from Laguna for Maracibo a week before. The commander of the military force, ordered to attack the naval force, under Morales, and encouraged by the proximity of its French friends, promises the most complete success to the constitutional cause.

We understand that the Com Inspectors have received a circular from the General Receiver, directing them to assist any cases in which persons shall have omitted to make returns of coin bought by them on any market day, or on any day between two markets, in order that directions may be given for the recovery of the penalty or penalties by the course of law; it being the desire of the Government, that a dead soldier is a most valuable article of commerce; and for such good reasons, the good farmers of Yorkshire are, in a great measure, indebted to the benevolence of their children for their daily bread. It is certainly a singular fact, that Great Britain should have sent out such multitudes of soldiers to fight the battles of this country upon the conditions of a European, and should then import their bones as an article of commerce to fatten her soil!—Morning Paper.

Six weeks have elapsed since the keelmen upon the Tyne deserted their employment, and there is yet no prospect of their returning to their engagements.
