OLD CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS. AND THE NECESSITY OF ACTIVE BENEVOLENCE AT THIS SEASON.

To bid the rancour of ill fortune cease, To quell anxiety I give thee peace, To quell adversity, or turn her spite, To stamp fraternity on generous hearts, For the high motives, those illustrious ends, Christian Charity to earth descends.

CHARITY is at all times commendable, but at this inclement season of the year, imperative on the children of affluence. Notwithstanding the numerous institutions founded in this populous town for alleviating the miseries of the poor, we are not on that account to suppose for a moment that the benevolent exertions of their founders and supporters are adequate to the wants of the numberless destitute beings who are the objects of their laudable beneficence.

Thousands of our fellow men thus drag out a miserable existence, while Plebeian our land and Plenty has made his abode there. Nay, in this cold and bleak season, when fire, food, and clothing are essential to the comfort and prolongation of our existence, there are numberless instances of our fellow mortals being compelled to live in dark and dreary cellars, stretched on pillows of straw, eating their humble crust, without fire and without clothing sufficient to protect them from the piercing winds of heaven.

When the generous mind reflects on the constitution of society and the various avocations of men, the years, the lives, the fortunes that have been spent in speculative disquisitions or in accumulating works of ornament and show, fit only to tingle the ear or please the eye, it deplures that deeds of beneficence for the amelioration of the miserable part of our race were not substituted for such trifles.

In faith and hope the world will disagree, But all mankind's concern is charity; All must be false that thwart the one great end, And all of God that bless mankind or mend.

In this season of the year, the subscribers to our public charities should be prompt in their payments, zealous in their exertions; and those who have not subscribed would do well to come forward willingly to aid the good work of rendering the misfortunes and miseries of their fellow creatures as light and as easy as possible.

The contemplation of human misery in any shape or degree is at all times painful to the virtuous mind; but the consideration of having, even in the remotest degree, contributed to its alleviation, is the source of the noblest, most exalted, pleasures of the soul.

The Duke of Wellington left London about eleven o'clock on Thursday morning, for his Majesty's Palace at Windsor, where his Grace had a long audience of the King, and in the evening returned to town.

we need not, from the precariousness and shortness of life, accumulate riches merely to gratify the mind or satiate our own appetites, inasmuch as we are social creatures, mutually dependent on each other's wants and desires.

"The poor weep unheeded," says Goldsmith, and it is much to be feared they pine away a life of misery; unassisted and neglected even in the midst of large towns where plenty smiles around.

Our gratitude to Heaven for the infinite number of mercies we experience from a benevolent Deity cannot be better evinced than in promoting the happiness of our species.

Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel, That thou mayest shake the superfluous to them, And show the heavens more just.

A letter from Madrid, dated December 31, mentions that the thermometer there on that day was at seven degrees below zero.

THE snow in several places along the road from London to Dover exceeds five feet in depth.

BRUSSELS, JAN. 11.—Among the ships that sailed from Ostend last year, we observed with horror one with a cargo of corpses, probably intended for the resurrection men on the banks of the Thames.

ROTTERDAM, JAN. 12.—The frost has set in again since last night, and there is a great deal of floating ice in the port roads.

A young lady of Bourg (Ain), rich and handsome, has been condemned by the Court of Arise to the punishment for perjurice. The crime was committed seven years ago, and during the time she was received into the best society in the city, bore a part, with rare enjoyment, in the most brilliant assemblies and balls of the town.

The Aviso of Toulon, says—"The order for the abolition of the magazine of camp equipments in this port, and the transfer of the effects to Marseilles, has been countermanded. The cause of this counter order is stated to be an intention on the part of Ministers to continue the occupation of the Morea. It is even said that three fresh regiments are to embark at Toulon to join the one thousand five hundred left in Greece."

The cotton market at Liverpool continues brisk; Wednesday's sale amounted to 6,000 bags, at an advance of 8d per lb.

THE DREAM.

Tempus fugit.
 Being a firm believer in ghosts and presentiments, I give you an account of a vision I have just seen. I went to bed about eleven o'clock, and was soon involved in thoughts from the visions of the night, when deep sleep fell on me. Methought I saw before me in the distance a venerable figure, whose flowing beard reached down to his girdle; on his feet were wings, such as poets feign to Mercury, the messenger of the gods, to be dressed withal; in his hand he held a sceptre, and he sat on a throne of iron. It was TIME; and midway between us appeared two others, the one on the right, an old circumspet veteran, whose head was silver'd o'er with age; the other, on the left, a young stripling, modest, curious, and inexperienced. I soon found their conversation to be

A DIALOGUE BETWEEN THE OLD AND THE NEW YEAR.

1829.—Before I bid adieu to this world, my brother, permit me to give you salutary hints respecting mankind, over whom you are to reign.
 1830.—Indeed, I thought mankind very easy to govern. What must I do, brother?
 1829.—Many things. You will have to tame the stubborn, disappoint the ambitious, prosper the industrious, reward the virtuous, punish the wicked.
 1830.—Are not mankind content as they are?
 1829.—I thought so when I succeeded my elder brother, but you will find it, as I did, quite the reverse. Their actions are enough to make Jove distend both his cheeks with laughter. If you were to crown them with peace, and shed plenty over their devoted heads, they still would be discontented; murmuring fathers, refractory children, ruling wives, cruel brothers, careless sisters, bad neighbours, roguish citizens.
 1830.—Alas! what a melancholy list of crimes! but are the particular vices of the earth garnered easily?

the earth, sound you celestial orb of day; do not, therefore, expect too much of me.
 1829.—You are much mistaken. Many things I have projected are left for you to mature and regularly organize. Our common father, Time, whom you see yonder, clad in iron majesty, will assist you to make many and important changes in the political and moral affairs of man.
 1830.—But what great or good works have you done, that I may follow them as examples?
 1829.—Many things; I have done a tardy act of justice to nearly seven millions of beings, by placing every supporter of the British throne on an equal political footing. I have liberated the ancient clime of classic Greece from the pond sway of the Ottomans. I have waivered the white flag of peace from the towers of St. Sophia to the frozen shores of the White Sea.
 1830.—Thus far well. What is done with the British possessions in India?
 1829.—A new state of things is contemplated there, and the efforts making at home for unrestricted communication with the eastern world will produce great and important changes. You will, with a parent's care, watch over this all-engrossing question, which will, during your reign, be brought before the august assembly at St. Stephen's.
 1830.—And what of poor old England, stands she where she did?
 1829.—The emerald isle still stands where it did, and still resists the hollows that roll against its rugged shores. Her resources are still great, if judiciously managed; her sons are vigorous, enterprising, valiant; her daughters fair, gentle, generous. No doubt her commercial distress will be surmounted, and every political wound which she has experienced will be healed by the national senate, as far as circumstances will permit. Good order, economy, an impartial distribution of the laws, respect, patriotism must be preserved during your reign. Peace at home, abroad respect; plenty, content, are things observed by good old England after all her perils past.

 1830.—What of Austria?
 1829.—She is governed by the wily Metternich, without commerce and without freedom, yet free from the yoking yoke of Spanish and Portuguese tyranny.
 1830.—America, the new eye of the civilized world, must be happy.
 1829.—Happiness is comparative at all times. America has her trials, her men of ambition, tyranny, and avarice; she is cunning, rade, ambitious, wrangling. You must watch her strictly. Her government, with all its boasted freedom, is unsound, and more liable to a convulsion than those of Europe.
 1830.—Have you had many changes generally?
 1829.—Yes; many young maidens become mothers; many cold-hearted bachelors become kind fathers; many striplings acquire a sense; and many virgins have lost their wits; many dissipated youths have succeeded to the fortunes of their 26-piping sires. As to the morals of the people generally, every one gets credit for more than he can pay, every body endeavours to outvie his neighbour in dress, furniture, and a good table; in short, every body spends more than he gets, and gets not half of what he could spend.
 1830.—Indeed! Such things are very strange! Pray tell me more.
 1829.—I cannot, yonder moving hand of time now about to strike the knell of my departure.
 1830.—What! must you go at twelve?
 1829.—I must. My hour is almost past.
 1830.—The iron tongue of midnight has toll'd twelve! Adieu, adieu, adieu!
 1829.—You will call his ceaseless course. The race of time, and of our infancy upon their heels, and of our marvellous boyhood legends store—how few, all weak and withered of their force, wait on the verge of dark eternity, like straggled wrecks, the tide returning hoarse to sweep them from our sight. Time rolls his ceaseless course.
 1830.—And beheld it was

THE COTTAGE SYSTEM.—We find by the Manchester Journal, that upon Lord Bathurst's estate at Nettlestead, near Maidstone, a field of ten acres, situated near the village, is to be parcelled out to ten labourers, of good character, who are to hold their petty occupancies free of charge for the first year, and to have an option of continuing at a moderate rent. A similar course has been already followed by several affluent landlords, such as the Bishop of Bath and Wells, the Duke of Northumberland, the Marquis of Stafford, and others.
 The following is copied verbatim from a bill delivered to a respectable person of Exeter, by a man who sells milk:—a bill for seven wikes milk at seven pence a wike within one hapney and three pence of cream and one and seven pence left last the hole together is five shillings and seven pence due to december the 21—1829.
 The Earl of Glengall arrived here a few days ago to superintend the production of his comedy at the theatre on Monday evening. This is a point on which his Lordship feels so much interest, that when it was brought out at Drury Lane, he is understood to have conditionally the performers being dressed agreeably to his directions. Whether this stipulation extended to the costume of the gentlemen we do not know.—Brighton Gazette. [We can only say, that if the non-comparative were dressed agreeably to the directions of Lord Glengall, he, in that respect, had behaved himself a very silly gentleman.—Globe.]
