

Based on him? Because he had loved Ireland too much...

Mr. O'CONNELL next gave—"The Clonakilla Free School Institution," on which he passed a high eulogium.

The Rev. Mr. O'HANLON, who returned thanks in appropriate terms, and proposed in glowing language—

"The friend of liberty—the benefactor of mankind—the liberator of his country—Daniel O'Connell."

The toast was received with deafening shouts of applause, and when silence was obtained, Mr. O'CONNELL said—

Mr. O'CONNELL said, he had never felt so flattered as when he heard his humble name associated with that of the great man whom he loved and revered.

Mr. FITZSIMON returned thanks for the manner in which his health had been received, and to the excellent Frenchman who had proposed it.

Mr. FITZSIMON proposed one of the most important measures—the abolition of every liberal or economical measure—the exposure of every corruption.

Mr. FITZSIMON returned thanks for the manner in which his health had been received, and to the excellent Frenchman who had proposed it.

length of a prohibition against the publication of the letters of the Liberator, &c. &c. For his part, he should say boldly and bravely, that such an act of despotism never could be carried into effect...

The next toast was—"The health of the Monarch, Doctor, &c. &c." The Rev. Mr. O'HANLON returned thanks.

Mr. O'CONNELL, on announcing the next toast, said, "Lafayette, and success to the patriots of France."

As soon as the applause which followed the announcement of this toast had subsided, there were fragments of Mr. Smith, one of the young gentlemen of that name...

Mr. O'CONNELL said, he had never felt so flattered as when he heard his humble name associated with that of the great man whom he loved and revered.

Mr. FITZSIMON returned thanks for the manner in which his health had been received, and to the excellent Frenchman who had proposed it.

Mr. FITZSIMON proposed one of the most important measures—the abolition of every liberal or economical measure—the exposure of every corruption.

Mr. FITZSIMON returned thanks for the manner in which his health had been received, and to the excellent Frenchman who had proposed it.

Mr. FITZSIMON returned thanks for the manner in which his health had been received, and to the excellent Frenchman who had proposed it.

GRAND DINNER AT BIRMINGHAM TO COMMEMORATE THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

On Monday last the Dinner of the Birmingham Political Union, to commemorate the recent glorious revolution in France, took place in Mr. Beardsworth's Repository.

The quantity of provisions, all of which we can pronounce to have been of the very best description and quality, will afford some idea of the amazing extent of the dinner.

At half-past one, Mr. Attwood, as Chairman of the Union, took the Chair. The trumpets immediately sounded attention!

The CHAIRMAN then rose—Gentlemen! In all public companies in England, in my remembrance, the first toast has always been the King.

The CHAIRMAN, in proposing the next toast, said they were met to celebrate a great and glorious event; an event, which he believed was unparalleled in the history of mankind.

Mr. LITTLE said, that at the very hour he was rendering this act of justice to that noble people, they were giving at the very same time such glorious proofs of the earnestness and priority of the cause.

Mr. BROWN, after a very complimentary observation upon their country, by selecting Mr. O'Connell as one of its representatives.

Mr. O'CONNELL now rose, and manifested that he was pleased, though reluctantly, to withdraw from them.

Mr. FITZSIMON was then called to the chair, and the activities continued with the utmost good humour until a late hour.

and he (Mr. A.) doubted not but their distress would quickly pass away; but whether it did or not, they were not the less entitled to the deepest gratitude of the people of England, and of the whole civilised world.

The CHAIRMAN said, having drunk a toast "to the people of France," he begged to remind them that there was another people on the face of the earth equally glorious with them—

The arrangements to secure order were excellent, though, we are very sorry to say, in consequence of miscalculation as to the power of speakers' voices, and the admission of more than had a right to be present on the occasion, considerable confusion took place during the latter part of the day.

At half-past one, Mr. Attwood, as Chairman of the Union, took the Chair. The trumpets immediately sounded attention!

The CHAIRMAN then rose—Gentlemen! In all public companies in England, in my remembrance, the first toast has always been the King.

The CHAIRMAN, in proposing the next toast, said they were met to celebrate a great and glorious event; an event, which he believed was unparalleled in the history of mankind.

Mr. LITTLE said, that at the very hour he was rendering this act of justice to that noble people, they were giving at the very same time such glorious proofs of the earnestness and priority of the cause.

Mr. BROWN, after a very complimentary observation upon their country, by selecting Mr. O'Connell as one of its representatives.

Mr. O'CONNELL now rose, and manifested that he was pleased, though reluctantly, to withdraw from them.

Mr. FITZSIMON was then called to the chair, and the activities continued with the utmost good humour until a late hour.

"The British Lion—may he never rise in anger, nor lie down in fear."

"Our brethren of the United States of America, who, following the example of their noble ancestors, have laid the solid foundations of the modern liberties of the world."

"Our patriotic and public spirited host, John Beardsworth, Esq. Long life and happiness to Mrs. Beardsworth and her family."

"Peace and good will to all mankind!" This toast was received with great enthusiasm, in the midst of which Mr. Attwood, and the rest of the immense company retired, the band playing "God save the King."

REPEAL OF THE UNION.

(From the Freeman's Journal.)

A new enemy to the cause of Ireland has sprung from that lurking hole, in which its professed not its will—for some time kept it concealed!

The Dublin Evening Post has, at length, thrown off the yoke, which, for a period, concealed, by some measure, its perfidy and tergiversancy.

The hiring of the Castle—the pensioner of the Wellington Administration—the tool of the Dictator has hung down its wretched grinning aspect the Repeal of the Union.

Well then, if Parliament will not entertain the question, where is the use, what is the object, in attempting to irritate Ireland to its overthrow?

Let us put an extreme, and see do admit an impossible case. Suppose the Union repealed tomorrow, Mr. O'Connell great and glorious success!

Here is the working of the bribe! here the effect of the three hundred pounds! Are the few quidniggers who still adhere to the Post, now satisfied of its corruption?

superadded to the proposal of the extract which we quoted, may convince their judgment, and remove their scruples.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor at the "Chronicle" Office, No. 11, Waterford Quay.

ADVERTISEMENTS. Mr. HADLEY proposed—

Vertical text on the right edge of the page, including "No. 161" and various notices and advertisements.

