FEATURES OF THE "IRISH DAILY TELEGRAPH." It may be pardoned for referring with some degree of pride to its size, being the first to introduce into the South of Ireland a large Eight Page Paper, thus giving the "Telegraph" an important advantage over its competitors published in the district. As it enables us to supply our subscribers with news and reading matter which they cannot possibly find in the columns of our southern contemporaries. How that advantage is utilised is the next consideration, which leads us to look at the "Telegraph" as a FAMILY PAPER—And a more important feature in connection with a journal can scarcely be approached, its mission being one of progress, and its work to teach and guide. How carefully, then, must the parent or guardian study the character of the paper he admits into the household to be for our aim, and has been our constant study, to make the "Irish Daily Telegraph" an acceptable visitor to every family circle, by excluding from its pages anything that could possibly offend the most fastidious; at the same time adding a new and most important feature, namely, "A Ladies' Column." Under this suggestive, Fashionable supply Original and Selected Papers, doing up intelligence, the Monthly Fashions, Household Receipts, Miscellaneous Literary Reading, and an ably written story, not of flimsy or sensational nature, but thoughtful, yet interesting, at once elevating both the mind and morals of the reader. Believing in the influence of the Press—for good or for evil—we have, in catering for the public, adopted the course of feeling sure that the "Telegraph" will commend itself to all as a First Class Family Journal.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT—A speciality of "The Irish Daily Telegraph" is its devotion to Agricultural Interests. In its columns will be found the Latest Market Intelligence, all the Decisions of the Land and Cattle Shows, &c., and in short all subjects interesting to the Landed Proprietor, the Agent, or the Tenant Farmer. COMMERCIAL PAPER—Neither expense nor trouble are spared to make the "Irish Daily Telegraph" the most reliable medium for every description of Commercial Intelligence, in the Markets of every part of the United Kingdom being inserted daily, the "Exchange" carefully watched, and the "Funds" closely attended to. Merchants and Traders, Shopkeepers and Farmers, will find the "Telegraph" their best guide, as its Commercial Intelligence is fresh and authentic. Its Politics—The Politics of the "Irish Daily Telegraph" are of the most interesting and moderate. It is in no sense a Party Journal. It touches the great truth now so universally held, that in the union of Irishmen, of all classes and creeds, lies the sole hope for the future of their country; and while conceding the fact that in recent years much has been done to promote the general interest, it is impossible, nevertheless, to deny that the growing and complicated business of the Imperial Parliament renders it unable properly to take cognizance of, or pay due attention to, Irish domestic affairs. If, therefore, for no other reason than this, and as no one can remain blind to the growing belief in all climes, that Irishmen are best fitted to understand and control their own business, the "Telegraph" gives its hearty adherence to the principle of Home Rule—teaching, of course, that such movements, and all other wholesale reforms, can only prove advantageous to Ireland, when presented by peaceful, orderly, and constitutional means, and that any disturbing element should be refused or permitted whereby the strength and unity of the Empire may be endangered.

GENERAL NEWS—As a General Newspaper, the "Irish Daily Telegraph" will bear comparison with the very best of its contemporaries, either Metropolitan or Provincial. Edited by gentlemen of experience and literary ability, its columns will be found to contain a vast amount of information on all important events, wherever occurring, keeping the reader apprised from day to day of everything of public interest in all parts of the world. At the same time, while taking a wide survey of Foreign and Home News, Local and District Intelligence, constitute a remarkable feature in the "Telegraph," a competent staff of experienced Reporters, and intelligent Correspondents, in every leading town in the South of Ireland, being permanently engaged to furnish reports of everything of interest. The Dublin correspondence is written by gentlemen of experience and ability, who have access to good sources of information, and give a lively and entertaining resume of leading events. We unhesitatingly then challenge criticism on the "Irish Daily Telegraph" in regard to those factors which characterize it as a first class Leading Journal, and confidently assert that it stands unparalleled either as a Family Paper, a Commercial Organ, or as a General Newspaper, in proof of which we may refer to any one of our friends, a perusal of which will at once show that the "Irish Daily Telegraph" is not only the largest, but the Best Paper Published in the South of Ireland.

CLOSE OF THE 33d YEARS LIST THE LIFE ASSOCIATION OF SCOTLAND. The Bonus System in Class A.

Designed with the view of Reducing the Expense of Life Assurance to the lowest sum consistent with security, has been eminently successful. Annual allocations of Profit are made in the form of Cash Bonuses, applied in part payment of the next premiums of all policyholders who have paid at least six premiums. This yearly Cash Bonus has never to any policyholder been less than 25 per cent. of his annual premium, leaving him to pay only three-fourths of the premium. According to the Carlisle 4 per Cent. Tables, a Cash Bonus of 25 per cent. of the premium is equivalent in value to a Bonus Addition to the Sum Assured of so much as £2 10s. to £1 10s. (according to age) per annum for every £100 assured. Such Bonus Additions rank with the highest declared by other Offices, and certainly exceed the Bonuses of many. The Bonus in Class B are Unusually Large, being reserved and accumulated for those policyholders who live till the average age of persons of their age at entry—that is, about one-half of the whole number. They are Bonus Additions to the Sum Assured, and have amounted at each of the past divisions to so much as £4 per annum for every £100 assured. The Waterford Chronicle

TUESDAY, JUNE 25, 1872

The hearing of the case of Garvie v. Lindsay was resumed at the sitting of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday, before the Chief Justice and a special jury. The action was brought to recover damages, laid at £2,000, for alleged breach of promise of marriage. His Lordship having charged, the jury retired, and, after twenty minutes' deliberation, they found for the defendant, with sixpence costs. Defendant, on leaving the court, was loudly cheered.

The chances of the election of Mr. Greeley, the talented proprietor of the "New York Tribune," to the proud position of President of the United States, are daily increasing. The Irish people in the States, and the Democratic party, are almost to a man for him. Mr. Greeley's election would be a great honor to the Press.

A Conference of the National Union of the Conservative and Constitutional Associations was opened yesterday in London, Lord George Hamilton presiding. It was suggested that Leeds, Wakefield, Norwich, Ipswich, and Manchester, might be carried by Conservatives at the next general election. A banquet was given in the evening at the Crystal Palace. About 1,600 persons sat down to dinner. The Duke of Abercorn presided, and the principal toast was responded to by Mr. Disraeli.

A remarkable document has turned up in the "Globe," purporting to have been written by the Rev. Selby Watson (who was recently tried at the Old Bailey for the murder of his wife), during his confinement in Horsemonger-lane Gaol. It is entitled, "Dead: A Contemplation." He describes the sensations of awe which crowd upon him as he looks on the dead body of his wife, and he treats of the souvenirs of old and happier times which he discovers in her boxes—"A scrap of paper, a little note written in the days of her courtship, a sprig of some plant carefully wrapped up, and packets of letters." He reasons in favour of the immortality of the soul, and he looks forward to a future condition of united happiness in "a state free from grossness," and as a Christian to reside in a place prepared for Christ's followers.

The Roman Catholic meeting to protest against the judgment of Mr. Justice Keogh, and to petition Parliament for his removal from the Bench, was held yesterday in the Rotunda. The place was filled, and resolutions were passed in favour of the objects of the meeting.

The Methodist Conference reassembled yesterday morning: the president in the chair. The senior secretary read the return of members for the year. It shows—emigration, 333; deaths; 329; leaving a total number of members, 19,866. The Rev. W. P. Appelpy, L.L.D., was chosen by vote of the Conference, to be the delegate to the British Conference, and Revs. Wallace M'Mullen and Gibson M'Millen, were chosen to accompany him.

A GRAVING DOCK FOR WATERFORD. Any one whose acquaintance with the Urbs In-tacta extends over the last eighteen or twenty years will scarcely need to be reminded that it has not failed to participate in the advantages arising from the spirit of modern improvement. Unightly alleys have been swept away; thoroughfares, too contracted for the requirement of traffic, have been widened; the Quay has been lengthened and extended—the general appearance of the city has been improved and beautified. Not the least conspicuous among the improvements visible is the deepening of the River Channel, by means of which vessels of considerable tonnage can reach the Quay at all states of the tide, avoiding the intricate and difficult circumnavigation of the "Island." Now, it is upon a subject of kindred interest that we would fain say a few words to-day. Our Harbour Board—whose attention to our interests and previous diligence cannot be too highly estimated—have it in contemplation to deepen the Bar in order to make it capable of passage by vessels of any size whatever. Against the intrinsic merits of this scheme we have no objection to make. What we now wish to do is to draw attention to the urgent necessity which exists for providing a Dry Dock, such as is to be found—it may be safely said—in almost every other town of the same size and importance in the Kingdom. It is a fact, perfectly plain and patent, that a certain number of vessels come to us in the course of every year, needing such repair as cannot be carried out except by means of a Graving Dock. It is, further, no more than natural to suppose, leaving out of consideration for a moment, the case of those injured or disabled by stress of weather, that in at least a considerable number of cases the captains would be willing or even anxious to have all the necessary refitting done here, provided that the necessary facilities could be obtained at the same cost as elsewhere, as it would save in many cases the extra trouble, not to mention the risks in the case of partially disabled vessels, involved in a cross-channel voyage. It may possibly be the case, as indeed we hope it would, that, in the event of the Bar being deepened, vessels of even the tonnage of trans-Atlantic steamers would avail themselves of the facilities which our harbour would then offer; but, even from the little already said in this short article, it will, we trust, seem evident that the necessity for providing a Dock such as we have spoken of is really pressing, and that—supposing it possible to be constructed at a reasonable cost—the probabilities are in favour of the speculation being likely to prove a paying one. Upon the question of cost the entire matter, of course, altogether hinges; and we believe that there are such facilities lying easily within our reach as would render the construction of a Dock a matter of no considerable difficulty and would besides hold out to the promoters of such a scheme a good prospect of a fair and profitable return upon their outlay.

THE TRAMORE RAILWAY—INCREASE OF FARES.

In common with many others, we have, within the last couple of days, noticed an announcement made by the Directors of the above-mentioned Company that, from the first of July, they intend to raise the Fares in a degree varying from fifteen to twenty per cent. This announcement we have seen equally with feelings of surprise and of regret. It is a change for which, we will venture to assert, there is no necessity whatever. The line is paying pretty fairly; and we would be glad if, by the legitimate traffic, it could be made to pay better. This, however, will never be effected by what certain companies appear to consider as the no plus ultra of railway management,—giving the least possible accommodation at the highest possible charges.

Nor can it be contended that the increase of Fares above referred to is in conformity with the action of the other companies whose lines run into Waterford. In spite of the heavier expenses entailed upon them for some time past, we believe that none of them have acted upon principles so unprofitable and so narrow.

We would fain hope that the Directors may yet have sufficient good sense to re-consider their decision, and to yield gracefully to public opinion while they have the opportunity of doing so.

On behalf of one class especially do we protest against the innovation,—on behalf of those toiling thousands of our city to whom the question of spending an extra shilling is no trifling matter, and to whom the ripple of the waves upon the beach, and the breath of the fresh sea breezes,—such as they can obtain at Tramore, and at Tramore only,—is a treat to which they longingly look forward from the beginning of one hard week of labour to the finish of the next.

VISIT OF THE SHAH OF PERSIA.

It is rumored that the Shah of Persia will shortly land at Dover on a visit to these countries. Should this prove true he will be the first monarch of Persia who has ever travelled so far westward as our shores. The good effects of such a visit on the future of Persia it would be impossible to exaggerate, for its acquaintance with European institutions would be increased, and it might be expected that in consequence of this increase that his government would be improved, and the condition of his people altered for the better. It has occasioned surprise that a journey of this kind should be contemplated considering that Persia has not yet recovered from the effects of famine; but Eastern sovereigns are not in the habit of consulting the wishes of their subjects, and at the present moment there are fewer chances of rebellion than were the Shah to absent himself in more prosperous times. The present monarch is Haasar-ud-Deen, the great grandson of Futi-Ali-Shah, the second sovereign of this dynasty. The first was named Agga Mahomed, who had raised himself to the crown through crime and intrepidity at a time when the nation was torn by civil wars, and in want of a ruler. As a nation, the Persians first rose on the ruins of the great empires of the Euphrates. The Persian empire, which succeeded the Assyrian and the Babylonian, was founded by Cyrus. It ended with Darius, who was conquered by Alexander the Great. Under Arsaces a new empire was formed called the Parthian. This empire was put an end to by the Saracens, who suffered at the hands of the Tartar chief Tamerlane, whose posterity was supplanted by an ancestor of the Sophi family, at the beginning of the fifteenth century. At the end of the sixteenth century Persia regained some of its ancient distinction under the rule of Shah Abbas, but under one of his imbecile successors the country was subjugated by the Afghans, who carried fire and sword into almost every corner of the land. The invaders were afterwards vanquished by Nadir Shah, who seized the supreme power, and diffused the terrors of his arms even into the interior of India. In 1747 this sovereign was assassinated for his cruelty, and the western provinces, forming the present kingdom of Persia, were grasped and held by an officer of great ability, nam'd Keerem Khan, who declined to assume the title of sovereign, and contented himself with that of vakeel or agent. Another period of terror and bloodshed succeeded the death of this ruler, and it was only put an end to on the accession to the throne of Aga Mahomed. We were at war with Persia in 1806, but in consequence of the victories of General Outram at Koshah and Mahommereh, a treaty of peace was signed between the two countries.—The Ladies.

THE LIVINGSTONE EXPEDITION.

In speaking the other day of Livingstone, we rather commented on the man than his achievements in exploration, but these are of the very highest social importance. The plan he laid down on first going out was sufficiently expanded to have required a vast amount of travel, and we must remember that since then he has entered on fresh expeditions. Livingstone's design on going out was to traverse through the almost untroubled regions between the Nile and Zambesi, keeping a north-westerly course in the direction of Lake Tanganyika. This Lake, situated between those of Victoria and Nyanza, either empties itself into the former or flows into the latter and the Zambesi—a problem that is probably solved by this time by Livingstone. We may be sure that the great traveller has not yet penetrated into all the recesses of Africa which he desired, otherwise he had returned with Mr. Stanley, who has recently made him out; and brought to Zanzibar the first letters that Livingstone has been able to transmit to Europe for three years. The glory of finding out the whereabouts of the distinguished explorer and sending home a telegraph, after a conversation with Dr. Livingstone, belongs to a Newspaper Correspondent. To despatch a correspondent in search of a missing traveller, supposed to have long since perished, into the heart of Africa, is an enterprise worthy of the sensational newspaper that took it in hand—namely, the "New York Herald." The former hope, however, has succeeded to the full, so that the conflicting rumours which have so long perplexed Dr. Livingstone's friends and numerous admirers have at last settled into the certainty of his safety. This is no contemptible trophy to have won, as the correspondent had to encounter some serious obstacles arising from an outbreak of hostilities between the Arab traders and the native population along this route. We have already said that Mr. Stanley, had they opened a way of escape for Livingstone, in case the latter were detained against his will. This, it is evident, is not the case, and that he stops behind to finish as much as he can, or all, if possible, of his long cherished plans. If we ask ourselves what is the best thing Dr. Livingstone has proposed to himself, what it is that he has been doing since he first set foot on African soil we find that to answer these questions would plunge us into all the disputed mysteries of African exploration. Still, one can give a shadowy outline of what Livingstone has been doing for Science and Religion. His great problem, which has engaged the energies and attention of so many in all ages, is the question of the source of the Nile, a question almost as old as the world itself. This is a puzzle which in geography has, up to this, been what the Origin of Evil is in metaphysics. Many, no doubt, harbor the misapprehensions that Speke, Baker, and the incomparable Burton has already set the questions of the Nile's source at rest. The utmost that has been accomplished—except Livingstone has brought the question further, or solved it outright—is this: certain vast lakes have been visited and described by travellers, but it would seem that such sheets of water are only huge reservoirs out of which the mighty Nile draws constant supplies. The question is what sources or sources feed these, and, perhaps, other lakes, not as yet come upon? For instance, the Lake Tanganyika, which has been already mentioned, was discovered some fourteen years ago by Speke and Burton, lying further south, however, between Victoria and Albert Nyanza, and yet no traveller has yet—perhaps Livingstone has done so—ever found out whence it is supplied or where it empties itself. But this question, as long as it is unanswered, must shroud in mystery the question of the Nile's source; for, if Tanganyika pours its waters into the Albert Nyanza, it must be regarded as a third reservoir of the great Egyptian river, or, rather, as it is the most distant stream yet reached, it is the best entitled to the name of source. However, given Tanganyika, the Nile's fountain seems as far off as ever, for we may all ask, what river or rivers are the Lake itself fed by? Of course, there are just the points, that, perhaps, Livingstone is now able to settle, so that all the world is anxiously looking forward for what he will be able to tell them. These and other geographical questions, we know, were those which Dr. Livingstone proposed to himself when half-a-dozen years ago he left his country to bury himself in the wilds of Africa. He entered this strange land considerably south of that enormous plateau of territory we have been indicating, and penetrated once more into the districts lavied by the great river on the Zambesi; which is Livingstone's own property, as far as the rights of the discoverer can make it such. Some years ago, it may be recollected, that Dr. Livingstone had been seen in the vicinity of these parts of Africa. It is certain that he had ascended the Zambesi, and halted in his progress at the junction of this river and the Shir. This spot is endeared to many of us—we mean the point where the united waters of the Zambesi and Shir sweep past—by the fact that here repose the ashes of Bishop Mackenzie, whose triumphs and sad fate have been those too often, alas, of the good Christian Missionary. Livingstone, we may be assured, has followed the course of one of these confluent, most likely the Zambesi, into the high tableland out of which the river springs. Indeed, we believe, authentic intelligence has already reached England that Livingstone has set on foot on this remote region, and that he has observed the valley of the Zambesi, to stretch east and west across Africa, while sloping northwards and westwards were multitudines of streams, pouring down their quantum of water evidently to replenish some other larger channel. The question now is, are these the head waters of the Nile? and could it be that this extensive tableland is, indeed, the central watershed of Africa, from which east, west, and north its three great rivers traverse their way respectively into the Mediterranean, Atlantic, and Indian Oceans? We must wait till the great man comes home in order to let in light of these and other deeply interesting questions of African discovery.—The Saunders.

"Mr. LAWES' MANURE has an unrivalled composition: it is dry to the touch, very sub-stantially divided, and may be therefore, with the soil with much facility. I may add, that in examining with a lens the insoluble Phosphate present in this Manure, I find Particles of Bone, which must augment its value. Its character as an active and certain fertilizer for a soil which is Turnips or other Green Crops, are to be proved so well established, that it is quite unnecessary for me to say anything on such a subject."—Extracted from Professor ARVOUS'S Report for 1872.

Visiting at a friend's house lately, we noticed amongst other books, on the drawing room table, one which had a highly ornamental cover, and a beautiful title. On opening the book we found the following written inside:—"Presented to Mrs. H. M. by her husband, as a token of his affection, on the 15th day of the month of June, 1872."

"One of the pleasantest sights we ever saw on Hampstead Heath was a group of beautiful sportive children bearing aloft the graceful ferns which they had newly plucked. It seems that the little ones will no longer enjoy the wild sense of freedom and genuine country life which the wild old heath provokes. On Wednesday a constable named Ableton Durrant was charged at the Hampstead police court with assaulting Miss McEvedy, the authoress of 'The Life of Woodward,' and other well known works. Miss McEvedy, who is very deaf, was walking on Hampstead Heath, with her ear trumpet under her arm, when the defendant came up to her, flourishing a stick, and repeatedly shook her, bruising her arm, and frightening her exceedingly. The defence was that defendant was not aware the lady was deaf, and that it was his duty, as the servant of the Board of Works, to protect the ferns. The magistrate thought the constable had shown excess of zeal, and fined him 5s.

"Hambler," of the "Sunday Times," says: "Your out-and-out flirt will never, under any circumstances, miss an opportunity. I have known girls flirt at the top of the Monument, and squeeze your hand in the diving bell in the most solemn manner, and when they do so in a pious manner at church, and I have seen the most reckless fashion. There are some girls I believe who would actually flirt with the pilot of a lifeboat who had saved them from shipwreck and would coquet with a fireman as they slid from their blazing bedroom down the fire-escape in the most bewitching of dressing gowns, covering the latest fashion in ornate night dresses."
